Mr. Lederman moved that a copy of this minute be prepared, sealed and presented to Mr. Smith as a personal memento of his long association with the school. The Black-Robinson Scholarships, Martha Pinkerton Scholarships and recent Bequest were <sup>all</sup> due to Mr. Smith's efforts and had been the means of helping many talented students who would not have been able to pursue their art studies without that assistance.

It was agreed to add Mr. Lederman's motion to Mr. Barrow's.

Mr. Smith in responding said that his association with the school went back for nearly fifty years. During that time he had seen many changes and the school growing ~~ing~~ in size and importance year by year. He could claim that he was responsible for starting the Commercial and Carpentry Classes, the re-modelling of the Museum and the building of the Art School. He had enjoyed the work immensely and was delighted to know that Mr. D. L. Johnston would be carrying on as head of the Art School. Mr. Johnston was one of his old pupils and was well worthy of the position. He attributed the success of the Art School to the fact that nearly all the staff had been trained by himself. It was very gratifying to see the successes achieved by former pupils and although he regretted having to give up the work at the school he was leaving it feeling very happy in the results accomplished.
