THIS WEEK'S PICTURE STORY

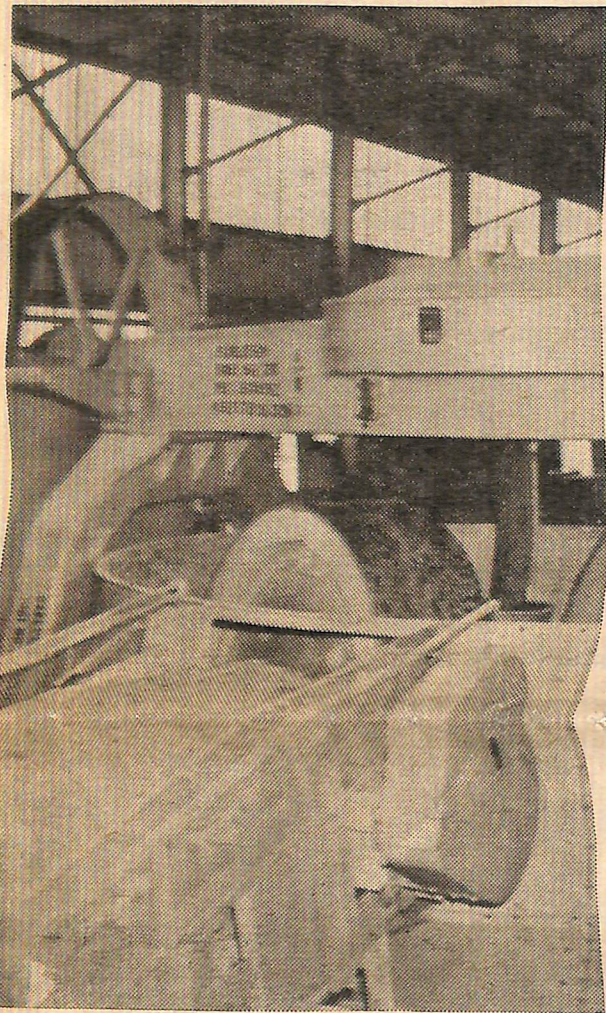

• THIS week's pictures were taken at Evan Bros.' automatic brickmaking factory at Stud Rd., Scoresby. Only on three occasions during the complete phase of production are the wire-cut bricks handled manually. Here labor is used mainly in a supervisory capacity.

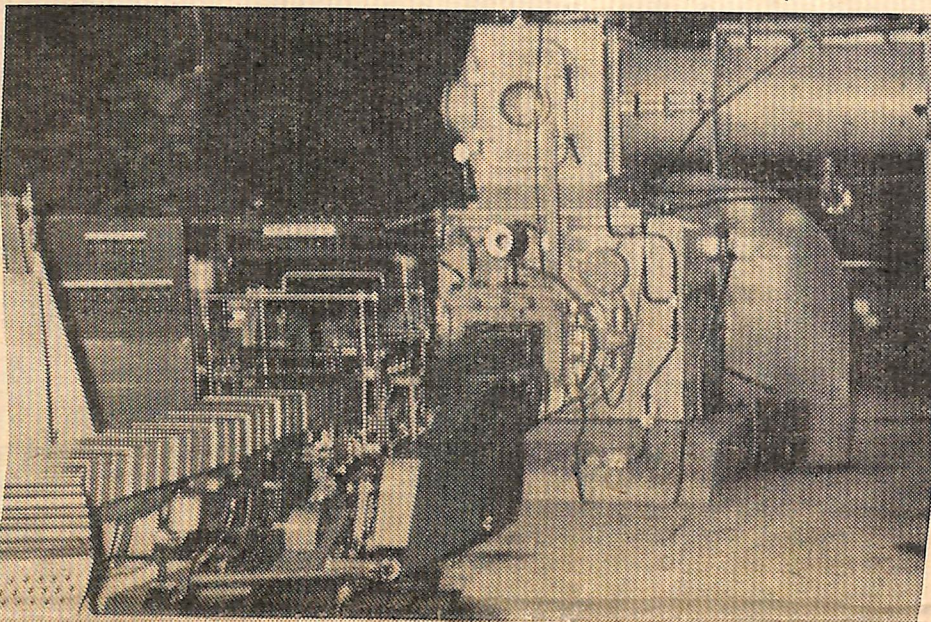

Top left: Truckloads of clay arrive from the pit and are dumped into a hopper.

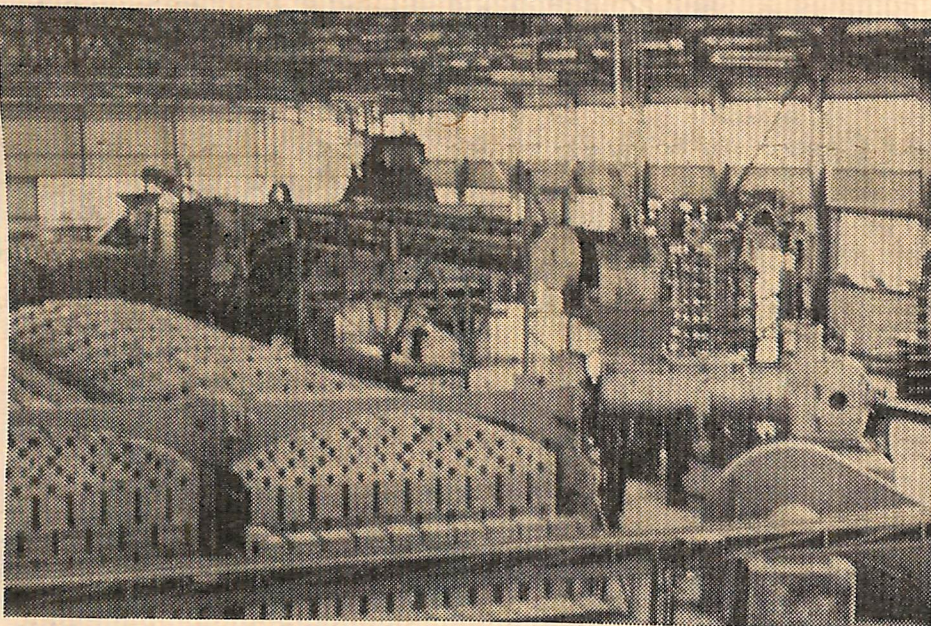

Top right: Conveyor belts feed clay into the mill to be pulverised.

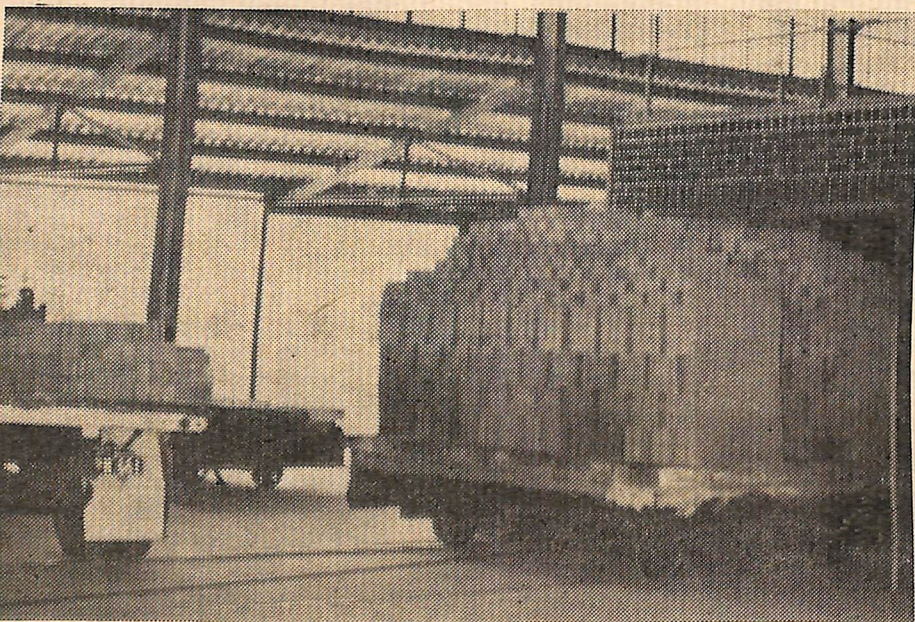

Other belts then move clay dust on towards the extruder, being gradually moistened as it moves along.

At the extruder, clay is squeezed into a long rectangular "sausage" and is here cut automatically by wires.

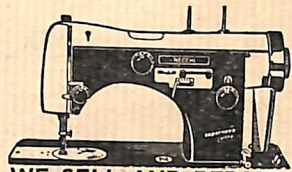

After being partially dried in small chambers, bricks are then manually stacked prior to being fired. At right of picture, conveyor-belt system is shown.

From the oil-burning kiln direct to the truck. With this sort of organisation, no business could be more efficient.
