Dear Robin:

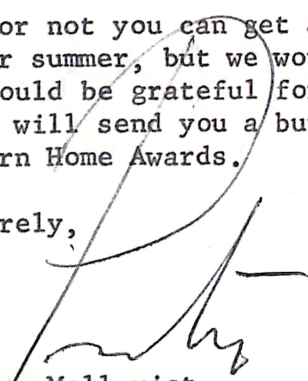

How are you? The letterhead will explain the purpose of this. I'm sending you an invitation. As you may recall from our talks last year, the American Institute of Architects and SUNSET jointly sponsor an architectural awards program every two years.

I'm now at work recruiting the 1965 jury. Our committee this year decided it would be proper to have one jury member from outside the country provided we could get someone who was sympathetic and properly qualified.

This letter, therefore, is an invitation for you to serve on our jury. The jury dates this year are Monday and Tuesday, July 12 and 13. Under AIA rules, the jurors get no fee, but the committee pays their expenses. In your case, we would send you a first-class air ticket. If you wish to convert this to economy class, the difference would pay for much of Patricia's expenses.

I don't know, of course, whether or not you can get away in the middle of your winter to try a bit of our summer, but we would like very much to have you. And by the way, I would be grateful for an early reply. If your reply is an acceptance, I will send you a bundle of material on the earlier years of the Western Home Awards.

Sincerely,

Proctor Mellquist

WESTERN HOME AWARDS COMMITTEE

March 3, 1965

Dear Proctor

What a beautiful idea! Thank you for the invitation ^{which} with great pleasure, I accept. Sometime I will find time to ~~sneak out of the office~~ and the extra money to bring Patricia.

I am honored and excited, and ~~look forward to hearing from you about the award.~~

When decided, I will be interested to hear who else is on the jury. I'm now at work recruiting the jury. I've decided it would be proper to have one jury member from each of the country provided we could get someone who was sympathetic and properly qualified.

Warm regards
Yours
