An advertisement in a paper man's marketable commodity, and it is quite as much so as a side of bacon, a pound of butter, or a ton of flour. No man can afford to give away the things he sells for a livelihood, and the man who does so in order to get business is generally in a bad way. Don't try to put the paper man "in a bad way." But exercise a little human nature. Support him; he needs encouragement and support; but do it in the legitimate way. If the printer gets a few pounds worth of printing orders from you, he is not in a position to give you a pound's worth of advertising for nothing. And you have had value for the printing already. Go into a grocer's or draper's for 15 worth of goods, and the grocer's man or draper will not throw in gratis 15 worth of something else that you may ask for. Try him "you don't believe us."

SUPPORT LOCAL INDUSTRY, AND
SUBSCRIBE TO THE LOCAL PAPER,
THE RIPONSHIRE ADVOCATE.

We ask that our efforts for the district's good shall be recognized. An increased circulation means still greater usefulness on our part. When a neighbour or friend asks for the loan of the local paper, tell him or her that for the small sum of it is obtainable direct from the office regularly.

3s per Quarter

In addition to complete and impartial reports of all local meetings, an interesting

14-Column Supplement is presented to Regular Subscribers.

Bear in mind that:

ADVERTISING ALWAYS PAYS.
Business men should note that as the Local Paper is extensively read in the district, it therefore affords a splendid advertising medium.

A Safe Remedy for all Skin and Blood Diseases.
If you suffer from any disease due to impure state of blood, from whatever cause arising, you should use the value of Clarke's Blood Mixture, the world-famous Blood Purifier and Restorer. This medicine has 40 years' reputation, and is today more popular than ever. The reason of this being undoubtedly because this wonderful remedy does what it professes to do—cure skin and blood diseases permanently.

Clarke's Blood Mixture
IS THE FINEST BLOOD PURIFIER EVER DISCOVERED.

It is warranted to cleanse the blood from all impurities, from whatever cause arising. For SCROFULA, SORE THROAT, ECZEMA, RHEUMATISM, GOUT, GRAVEL, BRUISES, BURNS, SCALDS, AND ALL SKIN AFFECTIONS. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pain, for it removes the cause from the Blood and Bones.

NOTE: This mixture is pleasant to the taste and warranted free from anything injurious to the most delicate constitution of either sex, from infancy to old age, and the Proprietors solicit orders to give the value of the medicine. Thousands of wonderful cures have been effected by it.

TRIED MANY THINGS WITHOUT BENEFIT UNTIL I TOOK CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE.
Mr. F. R. Lewis, 48 Bridge Street, Row, Chester, writes: "I have a line in 'The Riponshire Advocate' for 'Clarke's Blood Mixture.' I had some for seven months, and tried many things without benefit until I took your remedy. After the eighth bottle I was quite well again. Please send this letter as a token of gratitude to your wonderful 'Clarke's Blood Mixture.'—June 13, 1904.

ECZEMA AND IRRITATING SKIN TROUBLE CURED.
Mr. W. G. Weston, care of Messrs. Knott, 40, Essex-street, Kingland-road, N.E., writes: "Gentlemen,—I feel it my duty to inform you of the great benefit in health I have derived from taking your 'Clarke's Blood Mixture.' I have been a sufferer from eczema and an irritating skin trouble since the age of thirteen. With an out-patient at one of the London hospitals a doctor informed me that my disease was the result of faulty foreign food. I have had as many as thirty boxes under my care, but my father being a horse dealer and jobmaster. He (my father) was speaking one day to a friend of mine who mentioned that he was being cured of an ulcerated leg, due to a horse bite, by using 'Clarke's Blood Mixture.' I continued, however, to suffer until April 4 last, when my friend told me it was completely cured. Then I started to take 'Clarke's Blood Mixture' myself, and I am now completely cured, after suffering and being disgraced for several years. I am able to follow my employment, and am very glad to think there is such a reliable remedy obtainable for such a small sum. I should be pleased to answer any inquiries concerning my case."—July 12, 1903.

ANOTHER PERMANENT CURE OF BAD LEGS AND ABSCESSSES.
Mr. James Waring, of Clay Coton Lodge, near Higgly, writes: "It is with great pleasure that I write to tell you of the benefit I have derived from taking your 'Clarke's Blood Mixture.' For a long time I suffered with bad legs and abscesses. I was under a doctor for five months, and not getting much better, I went as an out-patient to the local hospital for two weeks. The doctor then told me I should have to go inside before he could do anything for me. I went as an out-patient for thirteen weeks, and after undergoing two operations I got better. Before I had been out of hospital a week I became worse than ever, so my wife told me to try 'Clarke's Blood Mixture.' I did so, and after taking five bottles and using four pots of your salve I was completely cured. I have walked twelve miles to see my legs broken out again, but, thanks to your 'Clarke's Blood Mixture' and your salve, I am as well to-day as I have ever been in my life. You can make whatever use you like of this letter."—Oct. 15, 1903.

IMPURETIES IN THE BLOOD.—We have seen hosts of letters from all sorts and conditions of people, in which the writers acknowledge the benefit they have derived from 'Clarke's Blood Mixture,' which as a curative agent cannot be too highly estimated, since it cleanses and clears the blood from all impurities, and restores it to its normal condition. This is a good result from the Family Doctor, the popular medical weekly, which goes on further to say:—"It is certainly the finest blood purifier that science and skill have brought to light, and we wish the utmost confidence recommend it to our subscribers and the public generally."

Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

Clarke's Blood Mixture, and beware of worthless imitations and substitutes.

NOTICE.
We have resolved to reduce to a Subscription for "The Riponshire Advocate" (which which is published a 14-column supplement containing well-selected reading matter) to 3s per quarter, and trust that this concession will be "argued" taken advantage of.

The Advertising Rates have also been considerably reduced, and advertising will find it to their benefit to avail themselves of the columns of "The Riponshire Advocate," which is the only newspaper that is printed and published within the boundaries of the Shire. As the Advocate of the interests and welfare of this district, it has a claim for a considerable amount of support, and has a greater scope for extended usefulness than any other journal or journal, within a given radius of Beaufort.

Job Printing, plain and ornamental, of every description, is executed with neatness, accuracy and dispatch, and on the most reasonable terms.

We take this opportunity of thanking our patrons for past favors, and while respectfully soliciting a renewal of support, desire to state that increased attention will be given to all matters of local and general interest. As a record of news we will always endeavor to make our columns as comprehensive as possible. In all departments, in fact, we will aim at improvement, and, therefore, cordially appeal to the public for increased support.

ARTHUR PARKER,
Proprietor.

Of you dry to do, please sit with advertising, you will find yourself already like a boy trying to slide a hill down without snow. Besides, there is such a difference: you don't get some snow you get make 'em; but you can sometimes shewally always make der advertising come right away quick of all year round, with some moneys.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you broken in your rest by a sick child suffering with the pain of cutting teeth? Go at once to a chemist and get a bottle of Mrs. WINDSOR'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor sufferer immediately. It is perfectly harmless and pleasant to taste, it produces natural, quiet sleep, it soothes the nervous system, it relieves the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for dysentery, and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Mrs. WINDSOR'S SOOTHING SYRUP is sold by all Chemists and Druggists everywhere.

Business men.—"You remember the ad. I had in your paper, and took out two months ago? Well, I want to have it put back again." Editor—"Why, I thought you said no one noticed it while it was in." Business man (humbly).—"They didn't seem to notice it." The mere fact of your advertising lets people know you are still in business; also that your business is sufficiently important to stand advertising. If you are in business you cannot afford to do without advertising, as it is too much of an admission to the world at large. Extract from an interview with a man who has profited by newspaper advertising. The greatest aid you can give your newspaper is your job printing; if you don't feel able to run an advertisement, surely you can afford to give the newspaper your cards, doggers, bill-boards, letter-heads, envelopes, and all business printing to execute. The newspaper man needs it, and it helps him to pay his printers for setting up the thousand and one free notices he gives you and your town; but don't give it to the printer or job printing office that can give you no such return, and is spending neither time, money, nor brains in helping you to build up your town. The time may come when a newspaper can live simply upon the revenue derived from advertising and subscriptions, but no ordinary news paper in any ordinary town can exist without the auxiliary support derived from job printing. Therefore, if you want a good newspaper—one that can still further help you and your town—give it your job printing.

THE MAN WHO DOESN'T ADVERTISE
Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
That to himself he hath not said,
"My trade of late is getting bad,
I'll try another for my trade."
For him no bank account shall swell—
He angul watch the golden stair,
To welcome home a millionnaire.

To such a man the noisy din
Of traffic may not enter in,
For bargain hunters by the scores
Shall pass his shop as if he were
Not there; his sign is on the wall,
And on some barnyard gate a scrawl,
No people who have eyes and sense,
Go prancing around to read the fence.

The man who never asks for trade
By local line or ad displayed,
Cares more for rest than worldly gain
And patronage but gives him pain;
From lightly trading, he no noise sound
Disturb his quietude profound.
Stars let him live in calm repose
Unmolested except by men he owes.

And when he dies, go plant him deep
That naught may break his dreamlike sleep,
Where no rude clamor may awake
The quiet that he loves so well,
And that the world may know his loss,
Place on his grave a wreath of moss
And on the stone above, "Here lies
A clump who would not advertise."

"MORNING'S PUPPETS" country. Begg, F. Begg, Wetherston, and other insects, exist quite harmless to domestic animals. In exterminating beetles the success of this power is extraordinary. It is perfectly clean in application. See the article you purchase in "MORNING'S PUPPETS," &c., with the signature THOMAS KRAATHE on the outside, as imitations are numerous and injurious. Sold in Tins, 6d. and 1s. each, by all chemists.

YOU CAN AFFORD IT.
Very few are too poor now-a-days to take their country paper, and it is false economy to try and get along without it. Hardly a week passes that something or other does not appear in its columns that will be of financial benefit to the subscriber, and by the end of the year he had made or saved or won twenty times the subscription paid for it. The city papers don't take the place of the country ones, though some people appear to think they do. The city papers are all right in their way, but they do not give you that in which you are most interested—your country news. You cannot learn from them when and where your country meetings are to be held, who are dying or who are marrying, who are moving in or who are moving out, court proceedings, who wants to buy or sell farm or hand produce, in fact hundreds of things of which it might be of particular importance to you to know. If you can afford to take only one paper, by all means take the one that is published in the country or district where you live. It will cost you less, and thereby you will be assisting yourself and keeping the money in the district.

NEWSPAPER LAW.
1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, in writing, are considered as wishing to continue their subscriptions.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their newspapers, the publisher may continue to send them until arrears are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their newspapers from the post-office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they settle their bills, and ordered the newspapers to be discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, the subscribers are responsible.
5. The court has decided that it is refusing to take periodicals from the post-office or leaving them uncalled for, "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a news paper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, is held in law to be a subscriber.

HINTS TO FRIENDLY READERS
You want to see the local paper a successful institution.
Talk about it wherever you go.
Mention it to the tradespeople with whom you do business.
If they don't advertise in it, try and induce them to do so.
If you are induced to buy anything from what you have read in its advertising columns mention the fact to the tradesman.
Don't lend your paper to any person who can afford to become a subscriber but is too mean to support local enterprise.

A country paper kindly supplies this beautiful simile:—"You might as well try to shoo a elephant with a thimbleful of soap as attempt to do business and ignore advertising."

MOULIN.—FOR THE TREATMENT OF BRUSHING.—Few drops of the Liquid "Moulin" applied as a wet tooth-brush produce a pleasant lather, which thoroughly cleanses the teeth from all parasites or impurities, hardens the gums, prevents tartar, stops decay, gives to the teeth a peculiar pearly whiteness, and a delightful fragrance to the breath. It removes all unpleasant odour arising from decayed teeth or tobacco smoke. "The Fragrant Moulin," being composed in parts of Honey and sweet Marie, is delicious to the taste, and the greatest toilet discovery of the age. 6d. all Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale depot 35, Abchurch Lane, London, England.

To our Readers and Patrons:

THE PROSPERITY OF A DISTRICT DEPENDS chiefly upon the support and encouragement that is given by the population to local enterprise and industry. Enterprise is to succeed or less extent, speculation, but such, whilst aiming at the success of the promoter, must offer certain returns to the whose support is necessary to achieve certain advantageous results on both sides.

Therefore, Support Local Industry and Local Enterprise.

The line of exchange was never satisfactory in its working; thus it was that the custom buying and selling, using a standard currency was introduced. (One form of that currency known as "paper money," and of paper money there is more than one kind. All kinds useful, but not every kind, retains its original value. The "paper" money most valuable as a newspaper proprietor is that which is seen him.)

and he will do his utmost to entitle him to a good share of it.

It was Benjamin Franklin who wrote—
"What steam is to machinery, advertising is to business."
And another writer has said that—
"He who in his 'biz' would rise, Must either 'bust' or advertise."
And advertisers cannot do better than make "The Riponshire Advocate" the medium for their announcements.

'Twixt Love and Gold.

A HIGHLY SENSATIONAL ROMANCE OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By J. Hamner Quail, Author of "The Cup Winners," "His Madeline," "Fenton Friars," &c., &c.

They walked on briskly, talking in low tones of the success of their adventure till they reached the station. There was no train for more than an hour, but they did not mind that. There was little fear of any attack being made upon them there, and they had so much to talk about and so many questions to ask Wylva of what had happened to her since she left England that they were glad to have the opportunity. The time slipped away quickly, and almost before they were aware of it they found themselves speeding towards the south in the early morning train.

CHAPTER XX.

Mr. Bexfield was finishing a late dinner at the Hotel International at Kimberley, which he had made his headquarters since arriving in Cape Colony. He had now been in the diamond fields more than two months, a much longer time than he had any idea of staying when he had set out from England. He had come out to the Cape to take Wylva to him a matter of stern prosaic business, that of seeing Wylva Merriam legally bound to Mr. Karl Branstein. Mr. Branstein, pere, had agreed to transfer to Mr. Bexfield shares in the Kimberley First Gems Mining Company to the nominal value of thirty thousand pounds—they were actually worth more on the marriage of his son Karl to Miss Merriman. But to the annoyance of all of them Wylva met Karl Branstein's advances with marked repugnance. His offers of marriage she dismissed with emphatic declarations that marriage with him was impossible. At last Karl and his father and Mr. Bexfield realised that their plans were being frustrated by "a chit of a school-girl," as they were pleased to call her. Then it was that they decided that what could not be done by persuasion should be done by strategy or force, and they agreed upon a bold coup. Karl was to take Wylva to his own house and keep her there until by some means, fair or unfair, they could obtain her signature to a form which should be evidence that she had legally married him. Wylva was therefore taken to Karl Branstein's house, and kept there a prisoner. For a month he and Charlie Drayton, her life had been a martyrdom. Karl Branstein and Mr. Bexfield in turn pleaded with her, raved at her, threatened her and tried to trick her into a formal contract of marriage with Karl. They had pressed wine upon her in the hope that she could be induced to take it, and that perhaps her mental faculties would be so clouded and her power of will weakened that she would agree to their wishes. Every attempt had failed. Wylva could not be induced to touch either a drop of wine or of anything else that was likely to throw her off her guard or weaken her power of resistance. They therefore decided to regard her as in a state of siege, small portmanauts, which he meant to take personal charge of. His portmanauts had failed utterly, and he was about to leave Kimberley for Cape Town on the way to England, at an early hour in the morning. He was dejected and dispirited, and was longing to get back to England. Wylva had simply passed from his ken, Lord Kilkerran had left Kimberley on the night on which he had attacked him in the smoke-room of the hotel. Mr. Bexfield felt sure that Wylva had been taken away by Lord Kilkerran's directions and that he had simply gone after her. His own plans had shattered and fallen about his ears, and he was, as it were, struggling under the burden of debris which had overwhelmed him. There was a knock at the door. Mr. Bexfield walked to the door and opened it. The hall porter stood by the door with a note in his hand. "This has come for you, sir," said the man handing the note to Mr. Bexfield. Closing the door again Mr. Bexfield tore open the note and read: "Have received news of Wylva. Come over and see me at once, if you can. Awaiting your arrival, yours truly,

CHAPTER XXI.

For nearly an hour Mr. Bexfield had been shut in the room which he had used as a bedroom during his stay at the Hotel International. His trunks were packed ready to leave the hotel in the morning, and he had been gathering up his papers and placing them in order in a small portmanaut, which he meant to take personal charge of. His portmanauts had failed utterly, and he was about to leave Kimberley for Cape Town on the way to England, at an early hour in the morning. He was dejected and dispirited, and was longing to get back to England. Wylva had simply passed from his ken, Lord Kilkerran had left Kimberley on the night on which he had attacked him in the smoke-room of the hotel. Mr. Bexfield felt sure that Wylva had been taken away by Lord Kilkerran's directions and that he had simply gone after her. His own plans had shattered and fallen about his ears, and he was, as it were, struggling under the burden of debris which had overwhelmed him. There was a knock at the door. Mr. Bexfield walked to the door and opened it. The hall porter stood by the door with a note in his hand. "This has come for you, sir," said the man handing the note to Mr. Bexfield. Closing the door again Mr. Bexfield tore open the note and read: "Have received news of Wylva. Come over and see me at once, if you can. Awaiting your arrival, yours truly,

Rising from his chair he walked to the smoke-room full of vague doubts and apprehensions. The room was small but comfortable. It lay at one side of the passage which led from the front door of the hotel, and had been unoccupied when Lord Kilkerran was shown in. He had taken a chair at the end of the room farthest from the door to await Mr. Bexfield's coming. As the discomfited schemer entered Lord Kilkerran rose and drawing himself up to his full imperial height, gazed sternly at Mr. Bexfield. "You are a pretty scoundrel," Lord Kilkerran said, angrily, with a withering glance at Mr. Bexfield. "What do you mean?" Mr. Bexfield demanded, with as injured an air as he could assume. "What do I mean? Come, come; we have had too much trifling. What about Miss Merriman?" "Where is she?" asked Bexfield sharply collecting himself. "Oh! That is too hollow altogether. You agreed with me that I should have her at your own price, I accepted your terms. You got the money, and I did not get Miss Merriman. You scolded me and sold her again to Branstein, and I suppose got your price for her from him. You are an infamous scoundrel." "Don't use hard names. Control yourself; you don't want the whole house to hear; these are private affairs," Mr. Bexfield said in his old masterful tone. "I say you are an infamous scoundrel. You took my money under agreement that I should marry Wylva Merriman. You said that you could guarantee that the marriage should take place, and you did not. You went and made a like arrangement with Karl Branstein, and I suppose took his money too. Where is the girl?" "I don't know where she is." "You lie. You have got her here in Kimberley for your own devilish ends. I demand to know where she is." "It is a lie. She is not in this town, nor do I know where she is." "You do know, you lying villain!" Lord Kilkerran shook his fist threateningly at Mr. Bexfield. "I tell you I don't know where she is, and if you are going to carry on in this outrageous way—" "Where is my money?" demanded Lord Kilkerran angrily. "You must take the risks of your venture like any other business man," Mr. Bexfield returned contemptuously. "Venture! You scoundrel! If I can neither have the girl nor my money I will have satisfaction. I will expose you and ruin you, but first I'll take it out of your hide, you scoundrel!" "Swift as a lightning flash, Lord Kilkerran's right hand shot out towards Mr. Bexfield's head. Instinctively Mr. Bexfield's arm had risen as quickly. It caught the blow but the blow was terrific. Lord Kilkerran was a powerful man. Mr. Bexfield fell to the ground. "Take that, you scoundrel; and that; and that! Curse you!" Lord Kilkerran kicked the prostrate body again and again. Then with a parting kick, as Mr. Bexfield rose to his knees, Lord Kilkerran walked from the room as two waiters were on the point of entering to see what the disturbance meant. As Lord Kilkerran walked with heavy steps along the corridor and out of the door of the hotel a young man emerged from a room opposite the smoke-room. His face was almost diabolical with the confusion and rage which it revealed. Hope, hatred, and vengeance were visible in his closely-set lips, his contracted brow in the deep frown lines on a naturally mobile face, and in the wild glare of his restless eyes. It was Karl Branstein. He had followed Mr. Bexfield to the hotel to have further conversation with him concerning Wylva's disappearance and had overheard every word which had passed between the stranger—Lord Kilkerran—and Mr. Bexfield. Hatred, despairing and enraged to the point of madness he rushed after Lord Kilkerran as he left the hotel.

CHAPTER XXII.

For nearly an hour Mr. Bexfield had been shut in the room which he had used as a bedroom during his stay at the Hotel International. His trunks were packed ready to leave the hotel in the morning, and he had been gathering up his papers and placing them in order in a small portmanaut, which he meant to take personal charge of. His portmanauts had failed utterly, and he was about to leave Kimberley for Cape Town on the way to England, at an early hour in the morning. He was dejected and dispirited, and was longing to get back to England. Wylva had simply passed from his ken, Lord Kilkerran had left Kimberley on the night on which he had attacked him in the smoke-room of the hotel. Mr. Bexfield felt sure that Wylva had been taken away by Lord Kilkerran's directions and that he had simply gone after her. His own plans had shattered and fallen about his ears, and he was, as it were, struggling under the burden of debris which had overwhelmed him. There was a knock at the door. Mr. Bexfield walked to the door and opened it. The hall porter stood by the door with a note in his hand. "This has come for you, sir," said the man handing the note to Mr. Bexfield. Closing the door again Mr. Bexfield tore open the note and read: "Have received news of Wylva. Come over and see me at once, if you can. Awaiting your arrival, yours truly,

On reaching Karl Branstein's house to his surprise Mr. Bexfield was conducted to an upstairs room. It was the room overlooking the green flag at the back of the house, which had been Wylva's bedroom, and from which Malcolm Cameron had helped her to escape. "Mr. Branstein will see you in a moment, sir," said the man who had shown Mr. Bexfield up to the room. The door was closed upon him, and he was quite alone. He wondered why he had been shown into that room—a bedroom. Presently Karl Branstein entered. Mr. Bexfield started. Karl was usually rather slow and ponderous in his movements; now he moved with a nervous quickness, as if he had lost his old power of control. There was something about his face and eyes, which sent a chill to Mr. Bexfield's heart. Karl looked like an old man—forty years older than he was a fortnight ago—and the expression on his face was one that told of madness. Mr. Bexfield shuddered. "Oh, you've come, eh! Well that is right. I want to see you. Have you heard anything of Wylva?" "No," Branstein answered in a way that caused Mr. Bexfield's blood to run cold. The voice, the manner, the expression of the face; everything was utterly unlike what he had been familiar with. A cold sweat came out upon Mr. Bexfield's forehead. He felt certain that Karl Branstein was mad. "Have you heard anything about Wylva?" he asked again, in a childish and mocking way. "No, I have not. I thought you had heard something of her," Mr. Bexfield answered uneasily. "Yes, I have; I've heard a great deal about her. Would you care to hear it?" Mr. Bexfield scarcely knew how to answer. Karl Branstein was evidently mocking him or else playing a part. "What have you heard?" he asked in a moment. "Why? I heard that before she was offered to me, she was sold to another man, and that as soon as you had got the other man's money you offered her in my way, and then offered her to the Kimberley First Gems. I agreed to your terms but I did not get the girl. She just made a fool of me or you did; that is what it means; you got her away just a bit too soon, before you got the paper. You have outdone yourself this time." "I—got her away!" Bexfield said astonished and angry. "Yes, you got her away, and by this, I expect you are offering her to someone else, if you are not too mad with yourself about spoiling my chance, to do anything to see it all. It is just a little round game; sell the girl to someone she won't look at; draw the plunder and then begin again. Better than diamond dealing. Excellent!" Karl Branstein laughed vacantly. Mr. Bexfield paused. He was wondering whether it was worth while exchanging another word with Karl. Suddenly he seemed to re-over himself, and to regain all his old decorum and self-control. "What do you want to see me?" he asked in a tone which plainly told that he was no longer to be trifled with. "I have got something more to say; just a little more, and you must hear it. This is Wylva's room. She slept—there. On that night she went through the window. You did not keep your part of the bargain. I haven't got Miss Merriman, but I'll keep mine. I can't get you out of the Kimberley First Gems; the father has his share, and in the thing you some of the gems, some precious sparkling diamonds, if the thing was yours, you would have your own account. You shall have the diamonds. I have them here, see." He slipped his left hand into his pocket, and in about a minute drew out his hand and held it towards Mr. Bexfield. A score or more of large gems sparkled on the palm. "Look if they are good enough, genuine," he said ironically. "They are fine enough for anything," said Mr. Bexfield, more sure than ever that Karl Branstein was out of his senses. "Yes, they are fine enough for anything. You shall have them all. Here they are. Take them." Quick as thought he drew a revolver from his breast pocket. Before Mr. Bexfield could imagine what he intended to do Karl slipped about half the gems into the barrel. The next instant a report rang through the house. He had fired. A bullet sped rapidly a dozen diamonds now lodged in Mr. Bexfield's breast. Again, and with a maniac's quickness the remainder of the diamonds were slipped into the barrel of the revolver on to the next cartridge. "Another instant the weapon came out again. Another bullet and another charge of diamonds had penetrated Mr. Bexfield's side. "There! I've kept my promise. You've got the diamonds. Take them with you, you cursed trickster," Karl Branstein said, as he snatched the revolver from Mr. Bexfield. Turning dismally on his heel he passed out of the room, leaving Mr. Bexfield in death agonies on the floor. (To be Continued.)

PHRENOLOGY.

"I had my character told" the other day by a phrenologist. He said I was a vegetarian. "How did he know that?" "Well, he saw that I had curly hair, red-dish cheeks, and a turn-up nose, and a sage look—see?" "Winsor Magazine."

cordial relations recently between England and France, coupled with the conclusion of the treaty which appears likely to be the outcome of these negotiations, in the early part of the year, for which purpose the Channel Tunnel Company has been kept in existence for many years past. It has already been proved that such an undertaking presents no difficulties insuperable to present-day engineering science. On the English side, near Dover, a drift has been driven for almost a mile and a half towards France, whilst on the French side a corresponding gallery has been penetrated fully one mile towards England. One-ninth therefore, of the total distance has already been explored, and it is significant of the ultimate result, that although the works have now been standing for twenty years since Mr. Gustave visited the English coast in 1882, they are still as dry as though driven yesterday. The chalk bed in which they have been made is impermeable to water, and is to be seen rising near Calais exactly as the same formation which disappears beneath the sea in the neighbourhood of Dover. The Channel between the two points, therefore, lies in a great chalk trough, in which the tides ebb and flow with little more chance of breaking through beneath than if their streams ran in a gigantic crockery pipe extending continually between the North Sea and the Atlantic. There is a certain risk of cracks in the strata, but the chance of these existing has been reduced to a minimum by the number of soundings taken, above the line of the proposed tunnel—the French company concerned having alone made more than 7,000 of these. The obstacles to the work are, of course, rather financial, and political than technical in the engineering sense. The money question bulks largely, for the estimate for the work is ten million sterling, and the probability is that it will cost fifteen millions, an immense sum upon which to incur dividends from a traffic, which would, of necessity, be restricted to passengers and light goods, and which would almost certainly be exposed to severe competition from improved means of transit upon the surface; such as the turbine steamers already introduced on the passage, and the Channel Ferry project for taking whole trains across; now being seriously contemplated by the South Eastern Railway of England and the Northern of France. The political objections to the tunnel project have doubtless been modified by recent events, but they have been the real obstacle in the way since the idea of tunneling the Channel was originally suggested by M. Mathieu as long ago as 1802. At that period no sane person on the English side would listen to the proposal, and the caricaturists of the period made great play of the fancy that Bonaparte and his legions should be permitted to burrow beneath the silver stream, and emerge, like rats or rabbits, from the holes in Kent. It was not until seventy years later that public opinion had ripened to consider the question seriously. It was again put forward in 1869 by Messrs. Bateman and Reay, and by M. Gamond in 1870-71, when a convention authorising it was signed between the English and the French Governments. But the Franco-Prussian war upset the arrangement and it was not revived for some years, collecting again in 1880, when the English company, which had been formed came to the end of its resources. It was resuscitated in conjunction with one connected with the South Eastern railway, but the works were finally stopped on 6th July, 1882, by an injunction, followed by Government action, based upon the report of a Commission, which decided against the tunnel for political reasons. So the matter still stands to-day, but what has been done is being kept intact, and only a change in the views of those in authority is necessary to set the heading machines whirling once more from both sides on their way towards a meeting beneath the middle of the Channel.

AT A RAILWAY STATION.

A railway booking-clerk was taken down to the clerk by the other day. He handed as usual to a passenger a sixpence with a hole in it, and on the recipient expressing unwillingness to accept it, the official behind the pigeon-hole became very annoyed, and flatly refused to take it back. Meanwhile, the argument was causing considerable impatience among those who were waiting to book, and presently the gentleman next to the protesting traveller observed, "Take the coin, my dear sir, and I'll give you another sixpence for it." This done, the gentleman said to the booking-clerk, "Single take, and among the coins he put down was the sixpence in dispute, which the clerk had naturally to accept."

VICE-ADMIRAL TOGO. The Japanese fleet at Port Arthur was under the command of Vice-Admiral Togo, who some months ago succeeded Admiral Tsuboi in command of the Standing Squadron. He is in the prime of life, and he of all available admirals knows what naval war under modern conditions means. He was once a cadet on the training ship, Worcester, in the Thames, sent to sea in a British man-of-war, and studied at Greenwich Naval College. In 1894, when the Japanese destroyed the Chinese fleet, Admiral Togo—he was only a captain then—struck the first blow. He was in command of the second-class cruiser Naniwa, not an armoured vessel in the usual sense of the term, but a good British-built ship of 3,650 tons, with a protective deck from 2in. to 3in. thick and armoured conning-towers. For her size she was very heavily armed, carrying two 10.2in. guns, six 5.9in. and a couple of nine-pounders, and ten Maxims for expelling torpedo-craft. This little vessel saw more fighting than any other vessel in the Japanese navy, and Captain Togo won for himself his title, "The Fighting Admiral." A British steamer, the Kowshing, and two others had been loaded up with soldiers' aid stores by the Chinese, and had started for Corea. On July 25, when in sight of the Islands of the Korean Archipelago, the Naniwa came in sight of the Kowshing, and fired blank shots as a signal for her to stop. The order was obeyed and then Captain Togo signalled "Remain where you are or take the consequences." The Kowshing was subsequently directed to follow the man-of-war, but the terrified Chinese would not let the British skipper carry out the order, and threatened to murder him. Captain Togo, when he was disobeyed warned Europeans to leave the ship, and then promptly discharged a torpedo, and opened fire with the five guns which could be brought to bear on the torpedo hit the vessel, and in the words of Her von Francken, a Prussian officer in the Chinese service who was on board, "The day became night; pieces of coal, splinters and water filled the air; then I believe all of us leaped overboard and swam." Many of the crew reached land, though it is said the captain of the man-of-war would give no aid in rescuing the Chinese; his ideas of war did not go on these humanitarian lines. The Kowshing sank in half-an-hour. The Naniwa and her consorts of the Flying Squadron were already considerably mangled, the Tsi Yuen, Kwang Xi, and Tzu Chiang, three Chinese ships, that same morning. The two former ships were much damaged, especially the Tsi Yuen and the last was captured. Admiral Togo also took part in the fight at the Yalu, where the Chinese lost four of their ships and had serious fires on three others. He was most fortunate, losing only one man wounded, and even a shell at the waterline, which ought to have done the Naniwa a great injury, exploded in a coal bunker, and was serious harm. The Naniwa, with the Akitsusu, was afterwards sent westward to reconnoitre Port Arthur Chifu, and Wei-hai-wei. They sighted two Chinese men-of-war. The one which could do so ran away, and the other which was aground, was destroyed. The Naniwa's shooting was especially good at the attack on Wei-hai-wei on January 26, 1895, and Captain Togo was present when the remnant of the Chinese fleet surrendered.

"THE MAN WHO STOLE THE GAINSBROUGH."

The sober, cold, technical judgment passed upon Adam Worth by the greatest thief-hunters of America and Great Britain is that he was the most remarkable, most successful and most dangerous professional criminal known to modern times. In a life of crime covering half a century Adam Worth looted at least 2,000,000 dollars, and most probably as much as 3,000,000 dollars. He cruised through the Mediterranean on a steam yacht, with a crew of twenty men, and left a trail of looted cities behind him. He was caught only once, and then through a blunder of a stupid confederate. He ruled the shrewdest criminals and planned deeds for them with a craft that bade defiance to the best detective talent in the world. The police of Europe and America were eager for years to take him and for years he perpetrated every form of theft with complete immunity. There were three redeeming features in the life of this lusty human creature. He worshipped his family, and regarded and treated his loved ones as something sacred. His wife never knew that he was a criminal. His children are living in the United States to-day in complete ignorance of the fact that their father was the master thief of the civilized world. He never forsook a friend, or an accomplice. Because of that loyalty he once rescued his band of forgers from a Turkish prison, and then set off to Italy to do it. Because of that loyalty he became "the man who stole the Gainsborough,"—Robert A. Pinkerton, in the "New York World."

GERMAN TECHNICAL EDUCATION. Broadly speaking, there are three kinds of technical instruction in Germany. The most advanced and scientific is given at ten technical Universities of textile engineering managers of textile engineering works, and forms practically a subdivision of the department of mechanical engineering. The second—and indeed, the most important in its bearing on the needs of the textile industries—is given at special textile schools for spinning, weaving, dyeing, and finishing. Thus practice and theory are combined; for every hour spent in the lecture room, two at least are spent in the workshop. At these schools there are evening and even Sunday classes for foreman workmen, and workwomen; and the special organization of the schools is adapted to the specific manufacturing needs of the various districts. Particular attention is given to this in the interests at once of time and economy. There is no waste, or waste is reduced to a minimum. All is practical, and meant to serve immediate use. The lower grade schools are for workmen only, and there the instruction is mainly practical—given at smaller weaving and spinning schools and instruction workshops. But everywhere science is more or less applied to all work, and thus intelligence which can suggest improvements and the shortening of methods of processes is led and directed; and everywhere researches in chemistry come into use. On that account it is chiefly that there has been such an increase and outturn as has led the Government largely to increase the grants to such schools. To show the high standard attained, as well as aimed at, in the technical Universities we are told that there is a very severe entrance examination, as well as other conditions. "Intending students must be at least eighteen years old, have completed the full course of the gymnasium, and must produce proof that they have undergone a period of one year of practical work at engineering works or workshops. These conditions apply to fully qualified students; persons with lower educational qualifications may enter as 'outsiders,' but are not admitted to the leaving examinations. The fees are moderate, and seldom exceed £15 per annum." Foreigners are not encouraged to attend the Universities. On the contrary, they are discouraged by severely extra fees; yet they attend in great numbers at all the schools. It is impossible to enter into the minute differences presented between the various schools in view of the distinctions in the fabric, &c., in the different districts. The system in this respect proves the amount of knowledge and exact thought that have gone to perfect it. "The object of the school is the instruction and training of managers, owners, designers, buyers, and salesmen in the textile branches. Embroidery, both hand and machine, is also taught. The course lasts one and a half years, each half year being made up of twenty-one weeks of forty-four hours instruction. Men only are admitted to the weaving schools, but women may take up designing and embroidery."

FULL OF SURPRISES.

He was an old farmer on a visit to town, and he saw two young fellows playing chess. The game was long and he ventured at length to interrupt it. "Excuse me," he said; "but the object of both of you is to get them wooden objects from where they are over to where they ain't?" "That partly expresses it," replied one of the men. "And you have to be continually on the look out for 'surprises' and difficulties?" "Constantly." "If you ain't mighty careful you are going to lose some of 'em?" "Yes." "Ah! there's that other game that I see some of you dressed up odd for, and play with long sticks and a little ball?" "You mean golf?" "That's what I mean. Is that game amusing?" "It's amusing and the exercise is beneficial." "Well, I reckon it's a mighty good joke." "To what do you refer?" "The way I've been havin' fun without knowing anything about it. If you young gentlemen want to enjoy yourselves, you come over to my farm, an' get me to let you drive pigs. You'll get all the walkin' you want, an' the way you have to watch for surprises, an' slip round so's not to lose 'em would tickle you nearly to death."

HAVE YOU EVER BEEN DEAD?

As an instance of red-tape, the following is hard to beat. When unwell on account of sickness, distance, or other cause to attend personally to draw their quarterly pensions, pensioners were required to send in their application, accompanied by a certificate from a doctor or magistrate to the effect that the pensioner was alive on the first day of the quarter, being seriously ill, allowed one quarter to pass without applying. At the commencement of the second quarter he sent two applications together with a certificate dated the same day. His application was returned, with a request that he would forward the life certificate for the previous quarter!—G. R. B. Salford.

BOILED LETTUCE.

Cut in quarters and wash well; shake the water out and tie together with tape. Boil in salted water until tender, and serve up on a slice of toast with white sauce on top. It resembles spinach, but is more delicate in flavour.

DOCTOR AND PATIENT. A doctor tells this good story about a hypochondriac: "Sometimes he would think himself a teaplot. Again he would be a bottle or his legs would be turning into glass. He was altogether a trying subject to deal with, but one morning the limit was reached, for when," says the doctor, "I asked him how he felt, he said, gruffly: "How do I feel? Why I don't feel at all. I have been dead for several hours. How can a dead man feel?" "You're joking, once, to humor him, so I said: "Well, you are dead, right enough. Now, upstairs. Well, send for the undertaker." "The undertaker consented to do this though with a rather uneasy look, and got into bed and stretched himself out. "Then, two or three at a time, his oldest friends were admitted. "These friends, having been well coached, gazed at the 'corpse' and shook their heads sadly. "Ah! 'one would say,' so he is dead at last, eh? Well, a greater villain never lived." "He must have died hard," another would murmur. "They say the wicked die hard always." "A third friend exclaimed: "He cheated me out of £500! I lent the money to him without security, and he pretended he had never received it." "At this the hypochondriac sat up. "You lie, George," he said bitterly. "But I pushed him back telling him to remember that he was dead, and he subsided again. "But when an old and trusted servant said of him in a loud voice: 'Well, the old 'curmudgeon is gone, and I am glad of it, the hypochondriac could restrain himself no longer. He leaped out of bed and seized the servant by the throat. "You scoundrel!" he exclaimed. "But a great shout of laughter went up; the patient seemed for the first time to realize his folly; he turned and went for a walk, and never again did he permit his hypochondria to make a fool of him."

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Fels are most easily caught on thundery nights. Russia has nearly three times the population of Japan. Out of 316 recent cases of persons wounded with bullets in the brain, 160 recovered. It has been proved that plants thrive better under white glass than under green. Thibet is larger than France, Germany, and Spain combined, but has only 6,000,000 people. The Ainu women in Japan tattoo their faces to give them the appearance of men with whiskers. The robin is the last bird to retire to its nest in the evening. It has large eyes and can see well by a dim light. A moderate wind moves at the rate of seven miles per hour; a storm at the rate of thirty-six miles and a hurricane at the rate of 80 miles. A medical man who has given much attention to the subject of cancer, recently called attention to the pernicious influence of clay pipes and decayed teeth in causing cancerous growths. Aitar of ylang-ylang which rivals attar of roses as a perfume, and is worth from £8 to £10 more per lb. is the only product of a tree which grows in the Philippines. People usually live longer in islands and small peninsulas than on continents. Barbadoes, Greece, Madeira, and the Shetlands are all favourable to long life. If the ocean were dried up, all the water passing away as vapour, the amount of salt remaining would be enough to cover 5,000,000 square miles with a layer one mile thick. Captivity changes animals' nature. A lion captured when it is full grown will always be treacherous; but lions, tigers, leopards, or other carnivorous animals that have been born in captivity can be tamed! They are quite as gentle and affectionate as poodle dogs. The death-rate in Cuba before the war averaged about 42 to 1,000, taking a period of several years. It is now but 21. This means a "recessed loss of time from illness, as well as saving of life. The result is due to the sanitary methods introduced. There are 190,227 professional beggars in Spain, of whom 51,488 are women. In some of the cities beggars are licensed to carry on the trade. Seeking alms is recognised as a legitimate business, and the municipality demands a percentage upon the collections. Seville is the only city in the Kingdom which forbids begging in the streets. When an Egyptian wishes to drink at the Nile, he goes for a short distance up the river, and howls for some time. The crocodiles being attracted by the sound, immediately crawl to the place, and the dog hastily runs to the place which the crocodiles have left, and drinks in safety.

"A few days after we had talk I have just repeated, immediately on making eight, a man on the deck ordered the gunnery crew to be on duty."

"I took the glass from the man made out a boat with a white sail. The figure of the man and one arm looked forward and presently a light was seen on the side."

"Two men were in her. One was under her feet, though she was not strong enough to catch the rope's end. The boat was of the iron type of ship's quarter-boat."

"What is the name of the vessel?" "My night was good. I 'prairie Chief,' and turned her back to the wind and hoisted her anchor."

"Meanwhile, the two men got aboard. One of the men was a sailor, and the other was a merchant sailor. They were both dressed in the uniform of the merchant sailor."

"The merchant sailor was a young man, and the other was an old man. They were both dressed in the uniform of the merchant sailor."

Twixt Love and Gold. A Highly Sensational Romance of Love and Adventure.

The "Harlech Castle" was forging gaily through the waters of the South Atlantic Ocean on her way to Southampton. The weather had been delightful, the heat of the sun being tempered by the deliciously cool but soft breeze from the west. Near the steamer's stern on the starboard side stood Malcolm and Wynya, engaged in earnest conversation.

A violent ring at the bell startled them. "Goodness! Whatever can that be?" exclaimed Mrs. Chambers. They sat silent, waiting for the maid to announce the visitor.

father's estates and money. As it happened he caught the same steamer as Wynya, Malcolm and Charlie had come home by, but he had not made himself known to her on board.

DOWN IN THE EARTH. TEMPERATURE VARIES IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE WORLD. In the report of the last coal commission the conclusion is arrived at that at a depth of 3,000 feet, the temperature of the earth would amount to 98deg. Fahrenheit, but it was considered that a depth of at least 4,000 feet might ultimately be reached in coal mining.

EVENTFUL HISTORY OF HARBIN. A "WILD WEST" TOWN OF THE ORIENT. But six years ago Harbin, Russia's Far Eastern base, was still a little hamlet, the tiny Manch population of which were engaged chiefly in making a villainous brand of poison termed by them "brandy," and distilling oil from peas and beans.

DANGERS OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY. Wireless telegraphy has its drawbacks as well as its advantages. The aerial wire which is tried up to the gaff that extends from the mainmast, has its end exposed, and thus makes an excellent conductor for the strong electric currents let loose during a thunder storm.

WHERE THE JAPS LEAD US. It is the merest commonplace to say that the Japanese are a god-awful nation, but it is astonishing to find how many things, large and small, they possess which we are still without.

FOOTBALL. STOCKYARD HILL V. CHEPSTOW. MORTON V. RAMBLERS. This match was played last Saturday at Stockyard Hill, near Stapleford. The Chepstow team were victorious, the game being a fair and well-played one.

CALIFORNIAN RAISINS. HOW THEY ARE PREPARED.

There is now an immense quantity of raisins exported from America; but very few people understand anything of the many processes through which they are placed on the market.

A NEW RIVER MONSTER.

In the days of Piny the elder something new was always coming from Africa, and that apparently inexhaustible country has kept up the supply of novelties till the present day.

DONALD DOWN FIRST.

A Scottish nobleman of the olden times was in the habit of indulging pretty freely at the hospitable tables of his friends.

THE KAISER AT HOME.

The German Emperor probably possesses the most remarkable saddle-room in the world. Over a hundred of the most beautiful and costly saddles imaginable are included, and some of them are unique.

SHE HAD TRIED IT.

The tramcar conductor had had a good deal of trouble in getting the lady into the car. But at last his struggles were crowned with success.

WORK, WORK, WORK.

The mass of work which he has to get through daily may be estimated from the fact that the number of different documents requiring his attention ranges from three to four hundred in addition to which there are interviews with Ministers and other functionaries, audiences to be granted, and deputations to be received from various parts of the Empire.

THE WATER TIGER.

"The people of the Upper Ogge give it a name—The Water Tiger. Sergeant Smith shot one recently, but unfortunately it escaped him. Its colour is a light tawny grey, dotted with black spots, the hair rough, instead of smooth, as in the other; the tail long and powerful, the paws short and webbed, and fitted with very sharp nails.

OAT CAKE.

Take a pound of fine oatmeal, half a pound of flour, a halfpennyworth of yeast, and a pinch of salt. Mix with milk to a batter, set to rise for three-quarters of an hour, pour enough to make nice-sized cakes on a baking tin, bake over a fire, taking care that they do not burn.

JAPANESE ENGLISH.

On a bottle of heliotrope scent sold by a Yokohama chemist appeared the words: "Perinotop hygenic, smelly water!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

They reached Southampton after a pleasant passage, and Wynya proceeded at once to Oak Lodge.

An application of the principle of the matter is capable of being the means of doing good in the administration of it falls short. The question of pensions is one that calls for serious consideration and though good motives may have actuated Parliament, it is not to be supposed that the Government will only be put down to a failure of the law.

A STORY OF LOVE . . . WAR . . .

BY MARY J. HOLMES

PART I. CHAPTER I.

The long disputed point of the South was in earnest settled, and through the States the tidings flew that had fallen and the war had ended. With the first gun across the waters of Charleston was ushered in, and the cry, "Peace! peace!" for "there was no peace." Till then, did the nation's lethargic slumber and shakiness with which it had become. Political differences, gotten, Republicans and struck the friendly hand, impulse heart throbbled to be watch-word everywhere was "union forever." The land was and breath of the Highlanders from every clump of heath wild moors of Scotland, every cry came up from the English's templed hills, were tired to toll, and hearts as true as flint; some from some the Keystone State, from the prairies of the Green Mountains of New Hampshire; forests of Wisconsin sheltered their childhood's home one cause they rallied round and Stripes, and went to not a foreign foe, but another brother's arm against another arm in that most dread and anarchic, a national civil war. In the usually quiet village land the utmost interest was thought there, as elsewhere whose hearts beat as war Southern friends as when a on a nation at peace, all evening came in which the meeting of that place was a dense and promiscuous ed its way to the old whose hallowed walks sound of life and drum, for the house of God, but able, in that dark hour, praise sung by vain and lips. In the centre of the men were mostly concrete the seats nearest the doped by women—the wives and sisters who had aching hearts to see the sons and husbands give tures to what seemed the warrant. Conspicuous among Widow Simms, whose old-born, with its faded gre visible at all public gat broad frill of lace shading sharp gray eyes, and a face. It was very white, thin lips were firmly closed the widow tried to look unconcerned when two went forward, their faces youthful enthusiasm, as the President repeat their name Simms.—Elk Simms. "I don't believe Will is here. I can't see him anywhere." "Did you know he had enlisted?" asked a young man...

"Will enlisted?" she repeated. "Such people as Will don't go to war. It's a very different class, such, for instance, as that one going up to sign."

This was his idea, and ere the clinging arms had clasped themselves from his neck his imagination had leaped forward to the future, and in fancy George Graham wore, if not a colonel's uniform, at least a captain's uniform, and Annie so cooed on the hill, which Annie so cooed on the hill, which Annie so cooed on the hill...

As to the child in peril instinctively turns to a mother who knows has never failed to succor, so Annie turned to George, and with a moaning cry for help sank on her knees just as he stepped into the lounge, she prayed that he who heareth even the raven's cry would care for her husband, and bring him home again...

"Mother," he whispered, half hesitatingly, "it will make me a better soldier, just as you used to do, with your hand upon my head. I'll kneel down, and you'll pray for me, and I'll wear a soldier's dress, and I'll wear a soldier's dress, and I'll wear a soldier's dress..."

shouted: "Give it to 'em agin, Carrots! Give it to 'em agin!" The message was repeated many times regardless of the unnumbered attention calls, but met with no better results. "Wot's the matter with the darned skunk? Is he dead?" the men were bawling, with patience exhausted.

Football.

Our remarks as to the unparliamentary treatment meted out to the Beaufort footballers last week by the Ararat club, and to the decided fiasco which was the home team in not entering the field after inducing the visitors to "strip" twice under promise of a game, has caused the Advertiser to indulge in a splendid attack upon our knowledge of football, and of the Beaufort players' "temporary mental aberration" in foolishly imagining that such redoubtable exponents of the game as the Araratians could be beaten by so insignificant a place as Beaufort. Our hysterical contemporary evidently chooses to forget that Beaufort have already this season badly beaten such a "combination" as were unwilling to play on the occasion referred to, and that the only logical conclusion, the Beaufort players and independent spectators of the sorry figure cut by Ararat could arrive at was that the home team would not risk another defeat, even after specially sending a man to Moyston to secure the services of their captain, and so fell back on the lame excuse of bad weather. Ararat can hardly expect the Beaufort players to travel so far a second time to perhaps receive similar treatment—particularly if the weather looks at all threatening—and probably will find that if they want to wrest the laurels from Beaufort they will have to do their fair share of travelling. The Advertiser having admitted that Beaufort should have been advised of the unfavorable climatic conditions prevailing at Ararat, entirely ignoring the possibility of the weather being altogether different at Beaufort, perhaps that journal will be generous enough to also admit that, despite the implied "deluge," there were a few local players who were sufficiently rational and manly as to desire to play a friendly game with their opponents.

BEAUFORT V. STOCKYARD HILL. (From our Stockyard Hill Correspondent.) This match, which was very evenly contested, was played last Saturday at the Hill, and resulted in a victory for the Beaufort Club by a narrow majority of 3 points. Scores—Beaufort, 2 goals (12 points); Stockyard Hill, 1 goal (6 points). The game, which was at times rather rough, was nevertheless well contested from the bouncing of the ball to the final whistle, several splendid football being shown by individual members of each team. The most prominent players for Beaufort—Young, E. Harnish, Tyrrell, McDonald, Cresswell, and Holdsworth, and for Stockyard Hill—Horn, Darcy, J. Wilson, A. Harnish, B. Kirkpatrick, and Burt. Beaufort United Common. The managers of the above Common meet at the secretary's office on 18th inst. Present—Messrs Humphreys, Ryan, and Brown (secretary). The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Reports. From the Secretary, reporting financially as follows:—Balance in bank, £41 2s 8d; cash in hand, £1 10s; making a total credit of £42 12s 8d; fees received to date for current half-year, £40 4s; unpaid fees due on stock registered, £5 13s; making the total assessment to date, £46 2s. All the arrears for the half-year ended 31st Jan. last have been collected. From the herdsman, reporting that 500 sheep and 20 head of cattle passed through the common since last meeting; that the assessment of stock for the half-year ending 31st of current month is very low compared with previous years, the recent high prices ruling the market having tempted people to get rid of their surplus stock. The next half-year will probably show a slight increase in the number of stock in the district. The reports were received. CORRESPONDENCE. From the Secretary for Lands, stating under date 24th ult., that it has been decided to exempt from occupation under miners' rights or business licenses certain land in the parish of Trawalla, and that action is proceeding accordingly. From same, under date 13th July, intimating that the block of land in the parish of Trawalla, referred to in former letter, has been exempted from occupation under any miner's right or business license (vide Government Gazette of 6th inst.). The correspondence was received. In reply to a question the Secretary informed the meeting that the block of land referred to is shown on litho. plan as 73s, 15 acres, parish of Trawalla. The following accounts were passed for payment:—Herdsman, £9. 0s. 6d.; Secretary, £23. 2s. 2d. perty cash, 14s. 2d.

Important to Applicants for Mining Leases. Applicants for leases within the district covered by The Riponshire Advertiser are advised to peruse the following facts:—The New Mining Regulations require that when a lease is marked out the applicant "shall insert in a newspaper PUBLISHED IN THE DISTRICT WHERE THE LAND IS SITUATED, or in no newspaper, then in the club published nearest the district, an advertisement or notice in the form marked A in the schedule prescribed." Tap days are allowed, after marking out the lease, in which to lodge the application with the Warden or his clerk, and forward a duplicate to the Minister of Mines. The word "district" in the regulations has been defined by the Crown Solicitor to be defined as locality, and not as mining district, and the lease should therefore be advertised in the paper nearest the land, and for which application is to be made. AS TEN days (not seven as formerly) are given in which to complete the application, no valid excuse can now be offered for failure to advertise the lease in the district paper, though it is only a weekly, and not a daily issue. This is borne out by the following memo. from the Mines Department received by Mr. H. A. Adams, Grassville Standard, Linton.—"Sir,—Referring to your communication, I have the honor to inform you that the Warden's clerk at Snythesdale has been instructed to advise intending applicants for mining leases, where opportunity offers [i.e., for tendering such advice], that the regulations relating to advertising their applications should be strictly ADHERED TO.—I have the honor to be, etc., P. Cohen, for Sec. of Mines and Water Supply."

THE COST OF HER SILENCE.

A Fascinating Romance of Love and Conspiracy. By F. LE BRETON.

PART 3.

His words effected just the change in Madeleine's countenance he had desired and calculated upon. The rare pink rose in the creamy pallor of her face, her dark eyes grew soft and glowing, and as the carriage swept round the drive and drew up at the massive portals of Barston Towers, it was a beautiful and admirably well-dressed man whom Gilbert Carew helped to alight, and led into the great hall where Margot stood, with Lady Wargrave in the background.

"Ah here she is," said Carew gently, as Margot half-shyly, yet eagerly drew near. "Margot, here is your sister, Madeleine. What a shame it seems you should not have known each other before!"

Margot looked up at the beautiful woman half-shyly; then as she met the gaze of the dark eyes fixed upon her own, Margot with a quick, child-like impulse, raised her face, and put both her hands into Madeleine's outstretched ones.

"I'm so glad," Margot said softly, "for I am sure I shall love you." A little quiver passed over Madeleine's face. She drew a thing which had ended in a half sob, and for a second could not speak. Then meeting a warning glance from Carew, she murmured:

"I hope you will care for me. I will try to make you," and bending her beautiful head, her lips met Margot's.

Carew with his inscrutable smile, moved down the hall to where Lady Wargrave stood staid, cold, impassive with her white, bejewelled hands tightly locked together.

"Lady Wargrave," he said, as she mechanically placed her hand in his. "I cannot express to you the pleasure I feel in bringing my wife to you. I know that Madeleine may henceforth rely on your friendship."

His face was smiling, his voice soft, almost caressing in its tone; yet Lady Wargrave winced under it as she went forward to meet Mrs. Carew.

"I am pleased to see you here," she said almost mechanically, as if impelled by some unseen force. "It seems strange after all these years only now to meet Gilbert's wife."

"And lovely!" broke in Margot, with wild and girlish enthusiasm. "Gilbert, if I wasn't prepared to love you before—though I am, for all my life, I've heard from mother what a dear, good, kind, almost perfect man you were—not that I like perfect men!"—with a saucy, protesting move—"If I wasn't prepared to love you I should now, because you have given me what I wanted most in all the world—a sister, and I can see she's a darling, and—hope you will mind me saying it—she is as if you don't love me I never will again!"—she broke off, turning with imploring eyes to Madeleine—"but I must tell you just this once, you are so lovely!"

regarded his wife through half-closed eyes. "Well?" he demanded again, after a brief pause, during which she continued to regard him with a manner obviously ill at ease. "What is it? I hope—here Carew sat up, and his light, mocking manner left him, whilst his face grew set and stern—"I hope you haven't been waxing confidential and letting out things to Margot; because, if you have, remember you have me to reckon with my girl, and"—

"Oh, Jack, don't look, don't speak like that! Do you think, after all this time, I should be so silly, so childish?" protested Madeleine looking at him with anxious, sorrowful eyes. "It's not that; but don't you think it would be wiser to let me know just a little more of how things are, not how they seem, for already I have felt suspicious, and had one or two bright over Lady Wargrave."

"Carew's knitted brows relaxed. He sank back with a relieved air into the cushions as he said: "What has my Lady Wargrave been saying or doing?"

"Only—I hope to Heaven it is not so—but I am afraid that—it so sounds almost too foolish to put it into words, but I have received you as the Gilbert Carew she once knew—but otherwise I should fear."

"Well, out with it, Madeleine. Don't beat about the bush." "Sometimes I think she has doubts as to whether you are Gilbert Carew. I know my Lady Wargrave knows me better even than you do, my beautiful Madeleine, therefore, with her there is no chance of a shadow of a mischance," broke in Carew, with his mocking smile, "unless"—

"He broke off abruptly, and gazed into space with a heavy frown. "Unless she is fool enough to warn Margot," he muttered; "if so—well then, I shall know how to act. No, my Lady Wargrave, I think this is a trump card, and unless I am very much mistaken, has received you as the Gilbert Carew she once knew—but otherwise I should fear."

HAS THE UNIVERSE A BOUNDARY.

An astonishing theory has just been put forward by astronomers. They state that the universe itself has a boundary. When we come to think of it this assertion seems almost fantastic, for we know that there are stars so far removed from the earth that even if they had disappeared before the Christian era, their light would still be travelling towards us. The reason of the new belief—that there is a limit to the extent of the stars, and that they do not fill an indefinite space, is suggested as follows:—Light rays pass through the outer ether without dimming or refraction which they suffer in piercing the atmospheric belt surrounding the earth. This being the case, light can be proved mathematically, that the system of stars were infinite in its extension, the whole heavens would be filled with their light.

STARS NOT INFINITE. As this is not so we may safely presume that the number of stars, though enormous, is limited. Several well-known scientists and astronomers have lately, we believe, come to the conclusion that our own solar system is only the centre of a universe of stars. They say that what is known as the Milky Way, which seems to us to be equally broad at all points, actually divides the heavens into two equal parts. Such a conclusion appears, at first sight, to be contrary to all the canons of astronomical science. The sun is travelling through space at a speed of something like a million miles every twenty-four hours, and in so doing, drags both the earth and the other planets along with it.

If this be so then surely it would seem to be impossible that the centre should have remained at the centre during the whole period of astronomical history. But our readers must not overlook the fact that the distances which separate the different stars are of appalling greatness. The earth's orbit round the sun may be roughly stated as 180,000,000 miles. Our nearest neighbour is the star Vega, towards which we appear to be travelling. And the distance from Vega is some eight or nine millions of miles. It will thus be seen that the new theory is not nearly so outrageous as it might appear at first sight, but still it lacks authentic confirmation, and must, for the time being, be considered as a theory in process of evolving into an established fact.

And yet the apparent infinity of the heavens is vividly put before us by M. Camille Flammarion. He tells us in his book on "Popular Astronomy," that if we could travel with a constant velocity of 186,000 miles per second, we would have to fly for four years before reaching the nearest star, and that, if we travelled thus a million years, we would only arrive at the vestibule of the infinite. And the speed at which each cubit of space is carried along is beyond conception almost. It is neither one, nor three, nor five hundred yards per second, that the earth, the sun, Sirius, Vega, Arcturus, and all the solar systems travel, but at 10, 20, 30, or a 100 thousand yards per second.—"Science Staffings."

WORK IN THE SIMPLON TUNNEL.

The ground plan of a building forming part of the contractors' station, near the northern tunnel entrance, shows the laundry for washing towels and the men's working clothes and underwear; and the depot for their outdoor suits; and the douches, the latter being connected to an unlimited supply of hot and cold water. The space reserved for the men measures 120 feet in length and 40 feet in width, and is divided into four rooms. One contains the clothes of 1,500 men. The other three are divided into long rows of lockers, each locker being provided with a lock and key, and a small cabinet for the men's work. The men are then carried to the works, special trucks with seats being provided for this purpose. The same train, on returning, brings back the men of the preceding shift who have completed their eight hours' work. These slight alterations in their outdoor suits, and slung up their working clothes, which thus have fifteen to sixteen hours to dry. The rooms are carefully heated and ventilated, and are divided into a number of small cabins in which the men dress and undress. Compartments are set apart for the men's outer suits, the laundry, and is provided with a complete set of washing mangle and drying apparatus.

A BOER BOY'S BRAVERY.

WOULD DIE RATHER THAN TURN TRAITOR. The following incident, told by Major Seely, of a little Boer boy, is an example of faithful and unyielding devotion which should be printed in letters of gold and hung in every house in the land. "I was asked," said Major Seely, "to get some volunteers and try to capture a commandant at a place some twenty miles away. I got the men readily, and set out. It was a rather desperate enterprise, but we got there all right. "I can see the little place yet, the valley, and the farmhouse, and I can hear the clatter of the horses' hoofs. The Boer general had got away, but where had he gone? It was even a question of the general catching us and not we catching the general. We rode down to the farmhouse, and there we saw a good-looking Boer boy and some yeomen. "I asked the boy if the commandant had been there, and he said in Dutch, taken by surprise, 'Yes,' 'Where had he gone?' I said; and the boy became suspicious. 'He answered, 'I don't know.' "I decided then," continued Seely, "to do a thing for which I hope I may be forgiven, because my men's lives were in danger. Dutch, 'I threatened the boy with death if he would not disclose the whereabouts of the general. He still refused, and I put him against a wall, and said 'I would have him shot.' At the same time I whispered to my men, 'For heaven's sake, don't shoot.' The boy still refused, although I could see he believed I was going to have him shot. I ordered the men to shoot, but they did not fire. The boy was levelled at the boy. "Now, I said, 'before I give the word, which way has the general gone?' I remember the look on the boy's face—a look such as I have never seen before but once. He was transfixed before us. Something greater almost than anything human shone from his eyes. He threw back his head, and said in Dutch, 'I will not say.' Thereafter nothing for it," concluded the major, "but to shake hands with the boy and go away."

A ROMANTIC MARRIAGE.

EARL'S WIDOW WED BY HER STEWARD. The recent marriage of Emma Dowager Countess of Ravensworth with Mr. Watwood, who is only 28 years of age and is described as a "steward," and "coachman," is a noteworthy romantic side, because of the difference in social positions of the bride and bridegroom. The latter is the son of Mr. Thomas Watwood, estate agent. The daughter of the late Lord Robert Downham, son of Lord Denham, the great lawyer, who was for many years Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. The late earl left his wife in his will nearly £100,000, so that the newly-married couple are amply provided for.

SHE SHOT A BURGLAR.

I understand you shot a burglar during the absence of your husband," said the great detective. "Yes," admitted the frail little woman. "I did." "What became of him?" asked the detective. "Why, the other burglar carried him away," answered she. "Which other burglar?" he said. "Well, the one I shot at," she replied.

THE LATEST SUBMARINE.

The submarine has now definitely passed out of the experimental stage and is an accepted engine of naval warfare. It would be absurd to suppose that we are anywhere near finally, or that the submarine is not destined to undergo many improvements and modifications. The evolution of the modern rifle, of the breech-loading cannon, of the torpedo, of the application of armour to ships of war, furnishes us with abundant proof that the end of the experimental stage is never attained in this transitory world.

But the period has now been reached when the capability of the submarine for defence, and the feasibility of directing its movements, has been clearly established. If the Russian Admiral in Port Arthur had had a dozen submarines at his disposal the whole balance of naval superiority would have been shifted, and the lost command of the sea regained. Indeed the command of the sea never has been lost; Admiral Togo's daring tactics would have been impossible. As it was, the risks he ran from the Russian mines are not fully appreciated in this country, nor is it generally known that one of his battleships just escaped certain destruction by steering a few yards clear of a large floating mine. Had the role of these immobile floating automata been filled by the living intelligence of a submarine boat the perils of approaching by daylight within effective range of Port Arthur would have been absolutely prohibited such an exploit.

Outside the initiated few it was not realised that within the last few years the automobile torpedo has become more and more a weapon of precision. Yet, marvellous as are the qualities which the gyroscopic Whitehead, we are on the eve of witnessing the introduction of an even more terrible weapon.

The American Navy is equipped with a torpedo which is even more accurate in its discharge and which is said to have attained a speed of thirty-five knots an hour. Even so, the last word in invention would not have been spoken; and when, as may happen any day, a torpedo is introduced possessing the same range and following as straight a path as the ordinary projectile, a new era of warfare and a new era of fortification will have been reached.

The submarine is essentially the weapon which can fire torpedoes to the most deadly advantage, and it must be remembered that hitherto modern science and modern skill have failed utterly in devising any means by which the attack of the submarine can be met or neutralised. If we are to allow our navy to fall behind those of other Powers in the possession and utilisation of these craft, we may as well abandon our shipbuilding programme altogether. France, it is true, is setting an example which we do not desire to see imitated, by practically putting her whole trust in these quickly-built and comparatively inexpensive vessels.

The submarine must only remain as one of the components of the fleet, but in the warfare of the future the victory will probably rest with that Power whose submarines are most numerous and are handled with the greatest daring and efficiency. In another respect France is teaching us a lesson which we cannot afford to neglect. Her submarines are not confined, like ours, to the Channel. Even to-day they are stationed at Bizerta, within striking distance of Malta and more are being sent out to the Far East. It is not a question into which the element of expense can be allowed to enter, but we should like to point out that the security conferred by the possession of a flotilla of submarines will in the future render unnecessary much of the expenditure hitherto devoted to land fortifications.

EDEN IN UGANDA.

A "ZOO" TWENTY MILES LONG. Mr Cunningham, secretary for the Uganda Protectorate, has given some details of Uganda. Tourist traffic is increasing, and 10,000 tourists are looked for now in the season. To visit Uganda ten years ago cost £2,000. Now it can be done from the coast in a fortnight for £25 in perfect comfort.

The scenery is unique, and there is about 50 miles of zoological gardens teeming with wild animals—zebras by thousands, and ostriches in flocks. As Mr Cunningham was coming down country he passed through a herd of fully 50,000 zebras.

"In Kavirondo," he said, "it is only the day after the 'Creation,' with the difference that Adams and Eve of Kavirondo have not yet discovered that they are naked, and instead of reposing in beautiful leisure among apple trees, Adam and Eve may be seen hoeing gardens along the railway, or carrying baskets of grain to the market at Port Florence at the majority of them without an atom of clothing."

But there is nothing to affect the susceptibilities of the European visitor. It is nature. You might as well object to a sycamore tree going without leaves in winter as object to a Kavirondo man or woman going naked."

GENERAL INFORMATION.

The water-lily is largely used in some parts of India by the natives as food. Only 36 persons out of every million live to be one hundred years old. Birds with the exception of the skylark and woodcock, do not sing in their flight. The skin of the whale is from 2in. to 2ft. thick, that of a large specimen often weighing thirty tons.

The dew that is annually deposited on the surface of England is equal to about five inches of rain. Telephones are to be placed near the chief substations in Britain to facilitate the summoning of vehicles. The sea is said to be gradually eating away the French coast, having within the last five years swallowed up no less than 460 acres.

The yellow plant has recently been discovered in California, but the nut it produces in its wild state is of inferior quality, and will not make good buttons. Near the Caspian Sea there are several "eternal fires," so called by the natives, where natural gas, which has been on fire for ages, issues from the ground. No Japanese ever sleeps with his head to the north. This is because the dead in Japan are always buried with their heads in that position. In the sleeping-room of many of the most expensive hotels a diagram of the points of the compass is posted upon the ceiling, for the convenience of guests.

Snake Valley.

A public meeting was held in the Mechanics' Hall on Saturday evening to devise ways and means of assisting Mr. R. A. Brown, whose two eldest sons, aged 12 and 10 years respectively, have been stricken down with paralysis. Mr. Brown presided. It was decided to hold a concert and ball at an early date, and the hon. secretary, Mr. W. C. Roddie, was instructed to ask the local friendly societies for their patronage. A strong committee was formed, and it was also decided to get a company from Ballarat to provide the programme.

The half-yearly meeting of the managers of the Camsang common was held on Saturday evening at Mr. Hall's Greyhound hotel. Mr. John Sheehan in the chair. The herdsmen reported that 170 cattle, 20 horses, and 13 goats were grazing on the common, and the receipts were £12 9s. Accounts amounting to £10 4s 9d were passed for payment.

A two-year-old son of Mr. Thomas Greenbank scalded his right arm severely from the elbow down to the wrist on Friday last through the contents of a kettle of boiling water falling over him. He received the necessary treatment, and is progressing favorably.

An old and respected resident of Mordoch, Mr. John Curbett, sen., died on Sunday. Whilst driving from Snake Valley to his home at Mordoch three weeks ago she was seized with paralysis, and this, associated with a weak heart, was the cause of death. She was 63 years of age, and leaves a husband and grown-up family of six boys and five girls.—"Courier."

BARTON QUARTZ COMPANY.
An extraordinary meeting of shareholders in the above company, convened for the purpose of increasing the capital of the company by increasing the amount payable in respect of each share in the company to such amount as may be decided on at such meeting, was held at the Mechanics' Institute, Beaufort, on Thursday afternoon last, 28th inst. Mr. D. E. Troy (chairman of directors) presided, and seven shareholders were present.

The manager (Mr. J. A. Chalk) having read the notice convening the meeting.

The chairman moved—"That the capital of the company be and the same is hereby increased by raising the amount of each of the 24,000 shares existing in the company from 2s 6d to 10s." He supposed they would wonder why the capital was not made larger in the first instance, but to have done that they had to have 5 per cent. of the money in hand, and therefore were not in a position to make the capital larger. They had to get the capital of the company with the last 2d. call, and as it would cost no more to do so now, they might as well increase the capital to 10s per share.

Mr. J. B. Cochran inquired whether they should not first have some report as to the future prospects of the mine.

The chairman said that was quite right, but, unfortunately, the prospects were not good. As Mr. Bailey, the manager, had to go home through illness, he (Mr. Troy) explained by the plan what work had been done. At the 35ft. level the stone was running north and south. They had sunk a shaft to cut the stone at the 160ft. level, where it was making stronger, and thought at a deeper level it would thicken out. Another fortnight, one way or the other, would prove it. If the present drive turned out to be no good, they would have to wind up the company, but if it turned out well they would have to call up more capital. If this meeting had been held after the directors' meeting, he could have given them the more information.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Welsh, and carried.

The minutes of the meeting having been read, were confirmed on the motion of Mr. Freeman, seconded by Mr. Carroll.

The chairman, in thanking the shareholders for their attendance, hoped that before many days were over they would have the satisfaction of hearing that something good had been struck; but if on the other hand it turned out to be no good, they would have the doubtful satisfaction of knowing that they had paid their money into a concern in which they had had an honest run for their money.

In answer to Mr. Cochran, the chairman said that if the money was called up it would be done in the same way as hitherto.

LIQUID COMPOUND, The "Stockport Remedy" for Coughs and Colds. Gives immediate relief.

Richardson and Co.'s Art Exhibition.

The winter exhibition of art photographs for 1904 by Messrs Richardson and Co. is calculated to surprise and delight all beholders, for it is difficult to conceive that anything could surpass it for artistic excellence, beauty of style and finish, as well as the great variety in all classes of studio work. In each class exquisite pictures are shown. The new photographs, as it were produced, must be seen to speak for itself, as it simply baffles description. They will undoubtedly prove among the best yet shown in Australia. Mr. Dearden, the energetic and artistic photographer, is certainly to be complimented upon being so well abreast of the times, as he is here introducing to the Ballarat public some new processes and ideas that were only introduced in America early last month, thus showing the advantages he gains by dealing direct with home houses. He has not to wait until Melbourne introduces the latest, as he is often the first in the field. Mr. Dearden has substantial reason, if he is inclined, to be proud of his stand in the art world. The new style of photography is suitable for every class of portraits, from evening dress photographs to pictures of children and family and bridal groups, down to the smallest miniature. The subject pictures are of a very high order of merit. "In Doors on a Wet Day" is a splendid group of three children intent on watching a top express engine on a small circular railway. The lighting is perfect, and the grouping and general arrangement leaves nothing to be desired in a picture of true artistic merit marked in both conception and execution.

This is a study of artless grace, a gentle smile, and a look of face, is another exquisite picture, although of quite a different order. The subject chosen for this is a lovely brunette, who poses gracefully, whilst with both hands she has a flower to finish her toilet. Her figure is so well shown to admirable advantage. The fine expression and soft modelling on the face show delicate handling and a perfect knowledge of all the principles of art in lighting and brilliancy and soft detail. This is a picture which will captivate at a glance the artistic eye. A beautiful picture of a lady in bridal dress. The delicate clinging drapery, with the veil, is soft and yet clear and well-defined in detail, whilst the pose is quite a masterpiece. The subject is a young girl, showing every detail of figure to a nicety. There are quite a galaxy of bride pictures, and also some beautiful bridal groups shown.

Start of the summer night. Far in your secure sleep, Hide, hide your golden light, My lady sleeps, My lady sleeps.

A lovely picture of sleep. The young girl, simply clad with black pearls, her hair falling round her in careless waves, lies at perfect rest. The splendid lighting and the natural pose are the embodiment of that which is so hard to come by, a picture of portraiture by camera, but here its simplicity seems its most charming characteristic.

"The Book Worm" is a splendid study of an old gentleman who, with his head in his mouth, is intent on his book. It makes a most fascinating study in light and shade. Charming, indeed, and the studies of that young girl and children in the collection. "Our Golden Wedding" is a picture of a fine couple, who recently celebrated their golden wedding. Head studies of elderly gentlemen make up the exhibition, and lend great charm to the exhibition.

Some beautiful portraits of debutantes are attractive, and are both interesting and artistic. The exquisite new mounts are worthy of mention. "The Carnival" is a beautiful one, in a lovely brown and gold harmonies with the sepia carbon prints, and is something entirely different to anything hitherto introduced. All the shades of prints, whether platinum, or sepia or carbon, are simply catered for in the lovely shades of mounts. The object is in the lovely shade of blue harmonized with the top of the print. The print is an ideal card and card of rich, heavy make, with level edges and embossed design. The "artist proof" is a lovely creation. The parchment on which the print blends at the edges, which is a perfect study in light and shade, which is crossed by the embossed design which envelops the whole. All the shades can be had in every conceivable shade of brown, and must be seen to be thoroughly appreciated. A noticeable feature of Richardson and Co.'s prints, which are mounted on dark mounts, is the white edges they print, which give such a beautiful finish. The entire collection is very large and unique, and will be universally admired.

The "Mazybrugg Standard" is publishing a series of interesting articles on the early days of the goldfields. Mr. G. Ray, in the course of his reminiscences, states that the first line of coaches run to Fryer Creek (Beaufort) was owned by Frank Clapp and Bill Rippon, who almost ran the first coaches to the big Ararat rushes.

Important to Applicants for Mining Leases.

Applicants for leases within the district covered by The Riponshire Advocate are invited to peruse the following notice.

The New Mining Regulations require that when a lease is marked out the applicant shall insert in a newspaper published in the district the name of the land, the size, and the position, and if no such newspaper, then in the one published nearest the district, an advertisement of notice in the form marked A in the schedule prescribed.

Ten days are allowed, after marking out the lease, in which to lodge the application with the Warden or his clerk, and forward a duplicate to the Minister of Mines.

The word "district" in the regulations has been defined by the Crown Solicitor to be read as locality, and not as mining district, and the lease should therefore be advertised in the paper nearest the land for which application is to be made. As ten days (not seven as formerly) are given in which to complete the application, no valid excuse can now be urged for failure to advertise the lease in the district paper, though it has only a weekly, and not a daily issue.

This is borne out by the following memo. from the Mines Department received by Mr. H. A. Adams, Geniellie Smeadley, Linton.—"Sir, Referring to your communication, I have the honor to inform you that the Warden's clerk at Smythesdale has been instructed to advise intending applicants for mining leases, where opportunity offers [i.e. for tendering such advice], that the regulations relating to advertising their applications should be strictly adhered to.—I have the honor to be, Sir, P. Cohen, for Sec. of Mines and Water Supply."

Proposed Abolition of Mining Boards.

The Ballarat Mining Board has issued the following circular against the proposal:—

"The Mines Bill now before Parliament is chiefly noticeable for its proposal to abolish the Mining Boards as at present constituted, and to substitute the Minister and Secretary for Mines, who are to be members of seven Mining Boards; the Warden and Inspector of Mines to be members within their respective districts; and the fifth person, not named; the last three to be appointed by the Governor-in-Council, which practically means the Boards being elected by the miners, and answerable to them for the faithful discharge of their various duties; it is proposed to place their powers in a body responsible to Parliament only, and which will be expected to do the work now performed by 70 members.
