

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. THE MYSTERY OF KILLEEN CASTLE: OR A BRANDED BROW. BY A. M. AND W. I. ROWE.

SECOND INSTALLMENT. INTRODUCTION.

"Begorra, but it's a fine couple they make entirely. But what will the old squire say, I wonder? For me own part, I don't care to have any more of the Castle people. Mysterious folk, like the Black Knight of Killeen, are good for neither king or country. But maybe it isn't good for me to be talking. Faith, before himself and the Ted Womans, shure, there's little that goes on in Killeen unbeknownst to them."

"Thus spoke the porter of Killeen station after Evelyn Fitzgerald had driven away in the squire's jaunting car. Evelyn, a beautiful girl of about eighteen summers, had come to take up her abode in Killeen Castle, and as no conveyance was available, Hugh had gallantly come to her assistance. A wild-looking woman stopped the car as they approached the Castle, and decreed a curse on the old building and its inmates."

CHAPTER IV. AN UNEXPECTED CLUE.

After a great deal of confusion the withdrawing of bolts and bars, the lodge gates were opened, and the old porter who stood framed in the aperture gasped in astonishment. "Bliss! it ain't the young miss herself! But where's the carriage? A few words of explanation followed, and its intended occupant must have missed one another. Most likely the conveyance being a little late in starting had passed the fair travel, leaving her cutting through the woods for shortness of time."

As her eyes rested on the stately gardens but ill-kept avenue of tall trees leading to her future home, a jump rose in her throat; a strange, choking sensation came over her, and she turned to her friend who had been kind to her. The old feeling of loneliness crept over her; she wished herself back at school with the lowing playmates around her and even the boys of the village who would greet her instead of strangers. As if reluctant to part the words of parting, Evelyn lingered by a friend's side, while the old servant gazed at her from under his bushy eyebrows, then, as if fearful that his escort might also expect to be invited to the house, said abruptly: "In sorry, sir, but 'tis poor hospitality we give here. I cannot say to enter though yer honour is a friend of the colleen, as no visitors are entertained here, worse luck! Sir Geoffrey hates strangers, and none cross this threshold."

Evelyn coloured to the roots of her hair at the man's speech, but Hugh seemed in no wise disconcerted. "There is little fear that I or mine will ever cross your master's doorstep. There is no love lost between the De Lacys and Fitzgeralds. I should not be here now were it not to direct and help this young lady; and you may tell Sir Geoffrey from me to be a little more considerate in future for the comfort of his guests."

"The girl's thanks were so softly spoken as scarcely to be audible, yet Hugh saw and understood the sorrow, disappointment and pain which entered her eyes as the gates closed upon him, and she turned to follow the unsmiling servant into the presence of her uncle."

"Would it be a case of like master, like man? she wondered; or could it be possible that her guardian was such a misanthrope as the servant had described him? And if so, was it not strange that her father on his deathbed should consign her to the care of such? Yet it must be so; and she shuddered at the thought of the terrible monster of a relative she was about to face."

"So much, indeed, were her thoughts preoccupied that she scarcely saw anything as she passed along that shady hall in the wake of the servant. Suddenly the man opened the door of an ante-room and motioned her to enter; then, without a word, he closed it upon her again, and the girl glanced round to find herself in semi-darkness in a small room whose only illumination was a faint glimmer of light which streamed through the heavy velvet curtains of the folding doors."

Apparently there was good illumination in the adjoining apartment, and stepping forward Evelyn was about to draw the hangings as to enter when she imagined to be an unoccupied room, when the sound of voices fell upon her ear. A woman's tones, loud passionate and angry was borne towards her. "I tell you I hate the idea. How can you expect to tolerate her in the house? Geoffrey you are mad—downright mad to bring the girl here. Take my word for it, you will live to rue the day you did so. Sneer as you like, but when the hour of trouble comes, remember I warned you!"

"Then, without having been seen by the mystified listener in the next apartment, the owner of that shrill treble voice fled out of the room, leaving the door ajar. Evelyn, who was standing in the doorway, saw a man's face, then a deep moan, issuing from some broken heart, was wafted towards her. Gently parting the curtains, Evelyn beheld the bent figure of a man seated by a table. His head was buried in his hands, and his back was towards her, but she perceived that the shoulders were broad, the head fine and noble-looking. Then to her consternation a groan, followed by a series of stifled sobs broke from his lips, as though he were suffering some terrible anguish. For some moments the squire sat on only the muffled moans filling the place with a tale of woe and silent agony."

"The girl stood like one petrified, unable to move backwards or forwards. She was still in a state of uncertainty wondering if she ought to reveal her presence or slip from the room unobserved, when fate decided for her. The man at the table suddenly rose. Evelyn instinctively shrank back to avoid using, when she again a valley of words, this time the strange occupant talking to himself, reached her. "Oh, Heaven, this is indeed more than I can bear! Help me! Help me! All shall be atoned for, I swear!"

"Too late! Too late!" The strange sound, not unlike that of a heart broken sob or sigh slowly pervaded the room, then softly died away on the silence of the night. Evelyn stood motionless, afraid to move, lest her presence should be discovered at this inopportune period. While yet ruminating on the course to pursue, the door of the room opened, and the same servant conducted her therefrom and ushered her into the next apartment where she found herself face to face with her uncle, Sir Geoffrey Fitzgerald."

In the sitting room at De Lacy Court two men were seated, engaged in earnest conversation. Evelyn, dressed in the simple, but elegant, attire of a middle-aged country gentleman; the other, a man of about thirty years of age, with an alert intelligent look, and keen, coal-black eyes, which occasionally glared upon you—a face once seen, not easily forgotten."

Matthew Cleary might have easily been mistaken for a professional man—a lawyer or doctor for choice—by the casual observer; but those who were connected with the inner workings of the law or that well-known detective department of Dublin Castle, his keen piercing eyes, high forehead, and long, hawk-like nose were familiar features. To those who had reason to fear the patient of the law, the man was indeed, a perfect terror, worse than a bloodhound in the way in which he scented out crime while many of his prisoners had been known to declare that his sharp nose had perceived the criminal and law-breakers long before he had true grounds for suspecting them. However that may be, he was well-known and feared by a certain class, who would have much rather had the whole remaining staff of their track than this one treacherous detective."

"For some moments the two eyed each other in silence. At length the owner of the Court broke it. "I have sent for you, as being a native of the neighbourhood, and well acquainted with the facts of the case, you to take in hand, I think you may succeed where others have failed. I am glad that you have at last consented to take up the matter, inspector, for there is no other on whose judgment I rely as I on you. They have taken a time, though, to make up their minds at headquarters. Could not spare you before, I suppose?"

"Well, Squire De Lacy, I myself have taken time and considered the matter fully. The reason for my disinclination was that I saw no tangible grounds no clue to work upon. It is clear enough that the Countess Fitzgerald disappeared on the very night her son was supposed to."

"Stop—stop! Do not breathe the word; it is a false, malicious, a lying slander to bring against the dead. My former friend, Sir Mervin Fitzgerald, was never carried to fit this in the face of danger; he was neither the one to take refuge in flight nor take his life in order to escape the consequences of his sin. No, no; much as I hate him now for the treacherous part he played towards me, I cannot bring myself to believe he committed suicide; the man was murdered, foully and brutally done to death, and by his own brother. The law is cautious, you say, inspector, and because the deed brought to him, they let the murderer go free; but little now as I love the man who was once my bosom friend, I hate his brother and family more."

"The wrong they did me shall you atone for, I will bring ruin and disgrace on their name, they tried to do on mine; the proud head of their race shall be bent in whame, a felon's death the price of his crime. I swear it! Bring home the murderer upon his knees and hang him; hang the humble the Knight of Killeen to the dust, and I will pay you well," cried Lawrence de Lacy excitedly. The detective eyed him strangely for a second or two. At length he answered: "Squire de Lacy, if I take this case in hand you must not expect it is with the same sentiments that you express; I simply work in the interests of justice, and am not a blessed or one-sided individual who takes to gain the reward. In this matter I must have a free hand; I will neither condemn Sir Geoffrey or any other man until I am convinced of his guilt."

"The squire grew red in the face. "Then, sir, allow me to tell you you are an omadhaun, a confounded fool! If those are your ideas you will fail ignominiously like the rest. Nothing but a firm conviction of his guilt the determination to follow up every little clue, no matter how trivial, will succeed in this case, for the man is deception itself," cried De Lacy hotly. The detective smiled indulgently. "I thank you for your candid opinion, and you may trust me to take every possible precaution; for my own sake I will strive to bring the case to a successful issue. But, as I observed before, I must be a free agent. You quite understand that on these conditions alone I take the matter in hand?"

Squire De Lacy seemed undecided and dubious; others had failed in the quest, and he felt positive it was owing to their refusal to be advised and guided by him. But knowing how high this man's reputation stood in the force, he thought it wiser to agree to his request than lose his services altogether, so at last reluctantly consented to the arrangement. The two then parted, with the mutual understanding that the detective was to lay a perfectly free hand in the matter, and not to be hurried or questioned on his progress unless he himself volunteered such information. As Inspector Cleary made his way from the Court he pondered deeply over all he had just learned; it certainly was a remarkable and peculiar case. The time had remained unsolved for years; others had given up the search in despair, declaring that in their estimation no crime had been committed, and that the former knight's death, if death there was, was either a case of self defence or the result of a mysterious disappearance of the countess remained also in enigma—one of those which the world is so accustomed to and content to let remain shrouded in darkness, until in after years they are completely forgotten. Matthew Cleary was so busily engaged piecing together the facts of this knotty problem, trying to find a motive for both the victims' disappearance and the countess' disappearance, which had ultimately caused her death that he was some distance from the Court ere he discovered that his steps were turned in the direction contrary to that in which he had been proceeding. He had taken rooms preparatory to commencing his investigations. On glancing round to locate his bearings, he was surprised to find himself on the cliff road, on his left a large opening in the rocks which pointed forward his curiosity was rewarded. A huge cavern, the very one described to him as the scene of the supposed murder, lay before him."

Instantly his professional instinct was aroused, and he at once determined to search the place. It was a beautiful, moonlight night, and the man experienced a weird strange fascination as he walked cautiously round the base of the rocks, and descended into the dark depths below. The edge of the precipice was covered thickly with low fir bushes, prickly shrubs, broom and heather, while the small plants of the rocks, in such profusion as to make the place difficult of access. The detective realized the danger, and was watching carefully every step he took, when his foot became entangled in what he imagined to be a coil of rope which he had stepped on, and he was thrown violently forward upon his face. For a moment the shock stunned him; the next he raised his head, and supporting himself upon his hands, he looked up at the cavern above. He felt something unusually hard—unlike either an ordinary twig or stone—pressing against his palm. He groped cautiously about, and to his exceeding astonishment his whole remaining staff of their track which was securely fastened to the ground. He was about to place his hand in his pocket and procure a match, when a strange rumbling, like the noise of a mill, was heard upon the mountain side. He listened and waited. Again the sound was heard followed by the click-click, tap-tap of what he at once recognized as a pickaxe being used in the earth near him. "For a moment the idea that he had stumbled upon a 'marc's nest' occurred to him—that this was but some villagers entrapping wild birds. Instinctively, however, he crept nearer to the edge and peered down. He saw a man, who was nearly took his breath away. Far down at the bottom of those vast rocks he beheld a light, and by the side of it moved to and fro a dark figure—the figure of a man."

Had Matthew Cleary been a superstitious nature the uncanny appearance of that bent form, the constant clicking and tapping going on so many feet beneath, must have unnerved him. As it was, the lateness of the hour, the darkness of the night, the midnight workman, served only to increase his curiosity, made him more determined to see the end, and, if possible, learn the meaning of this secret and mysterious work. He peered down at the man, who was peering up at him, and saw that he was a peasant, seeking wild birds would make such a noise, while no one bent on honest, lawful labour would choose such an hour for the commencing of a task, which could be better done in daylight, especially as there was nothing to interfere in the way of traffic or anything else. For some time the one below worked, while from his coign of vantage, and despite the awkwardness of his position, the inspector remained in his hands and knees—the lynx-eyed man of the law continued his weary vigil. An hour passed, and there was no cessation in the workman's toil. At length, as he laid aside his tools, and seated himself among the rocks where he had been so eagerly seeking. Then, just as the moon descended, a dark shadow, and all appeared behind a cloud, the man rose, darkness being upon him, and he followed his movements, he discovered soon that the one below was slowly but surely ascending by the aid of the rope which at first he traced his attention and along this strange scene. Steadily the inspector crept away from his realization that it was to discover this man's mission who he believed, it would never do for the other to know, he knew he was being watched. Up and up the figure climbed, till at last the dark mass of humanity clinging to the rope was almost at the top. With a bounding leap, the man leaped down, and with a terrible catastrophe might happen, yet afraid to offer assistance, not wishing to startle the man who hung in mid-air and whom the least thing could cause to lose his balance, hurl into the abyss. Bit by bit, little by little, the intrepid climber drew nearer, until at length the watcher was able to distinguish that he was an ordinary farm labourer, and wore a cap of the same stamp on his head. With an agility plainly showing he was no new hand at the game, the man swung along, and having reached the summit of the rocks, clambered up the sides. As he had hiterto been hidden, sailed from behind a cloud, and the whole scene was illuminated with its mellow light. Hugh, who had been sitting hard to

There, distinctly outlined in the silvery radiance, with his tall figure turned towards the watcher, thought of his well-built form showing to perfection, the workman stood, a king among men as far as his personal appearance was concerned. As he turned and strode rapidly away, he was a cry of surprise burst from the detective's lips. Where, oh, where had he seen that face before? Surely too, if he was not mistaken, those hands had not long been accustomed to work like they had done that night. As slowly, and at a safe distance he followed in his quarry's footsteps the man of law rubbed his hands gleefully together, and inwardly congratulated himself in the following terms: "That was a lucky mistake of yours, Matt, my boy; it has provided you with a possible clue. Tonight may prove the turning-point. This hitherto impenetrable mystery."

CHAPTER V. TIM BROGAN ASKS A FAVOUR. Two days following his meeting with Evelyn Fitzgerald found Hugh de Lacy venturing his way in the direction of the Court. It must have been a coincidence that he should have business in that quarter considering that at other times he was rarely to be seen in the neighbourhood; and the same thought occurred to another person, a peasant, who was making his way in the opposite direction. "So great was the cyclist's abstraction that he was not aware of the other's close approach. Till a cheery voice called him with: "Wishu, good morrow to yer honour. An' is it runnan' down a decent neighbour y'd be, Masther Hugh?" The rider looked up, slowed down for it's in trouble I am this blessed day; an' be the same token, it's a favour I'll be after axin' ye."

"A favour? Why, of course, Tim, if I can grant it. But I must say I have no objection to your drink again, have you any fresh scrapes?" "Drink! Is it me, yer honour? Faith, no, ne'er a drop! Shure, it is precious little I've had at all of late; not enuf to warm the cockles of my own sperrits up."

"Hugh smiled. "May I inquire what the trouble is, Tim?" "Begorra, ye may, sorr; it's desolation entirely. I intend to retire into private life. An' sick as I am, I can't do it. An' wearin' thin coney' clothes; they spoil a man's appearance completely, an' shure no self-respectin' colleen 'ud look at me in that rig-out that fit that where it touched. "Oh, so that's the mischief! Some prett' girls has given you the go-by, Brogan?" "Well, it is an' it isn't, though that was bad enuf and hurtful to me feelin's. It's worse than that."

"Worse, Tim? You surely have not been in the habit of leaving the railway company's service? Out with it, man. What's wrong?" "Shure, I'm comin' to it, Masther Hugh, if you'd only give me time to think. My own free will; but to get the cold shoulder in that thirty manner all on account of a red-haired woman is detrimental to a man's character."

"You have been discharged, then, Tim? But what is the name of fortune had the red-haired woman to do with it?" asked Hugh, in surprise. "Faith, more nor ye think, sorr. Shure she's the devil's own, it is so. That's what I can't get my head round. If a man makes herself on the road, something terrible will happen."

"Well, yer honour, a misfortune thing for me, Mistor Lisle, her ladyship's unexpected came along, an' he had to thramp it himself, so he left his portmanteau or alise, or something like that he called it, to be sent on after him."

"Now, on the instant, I know that something queer had happened to me if such a noise, while no one bent on honest, lawful labour would choose such an hour for the commencing of a task, which could be better done in daylight, especially as there was nothing to interfere in the way of traffic or anything else. For some time the one below worked, while from his coign of vantage, and despite the awkwardness of his position, the inspector remained in his hands and knees—the lynx-eyed man of the law continued his weary vigil. As he had hiterto been hidden, sailed from behind a cloud, and the whole scene was illuminated with its mellow light. Hugh, who had been sitting hard to stife his mirth during the recital, now laughed heartily at the terrible predicament to leave poor old Doran in. Most likely he is not afraid of that red-haired woman you are; so what will become of Mr. Lisle's box, I wonder?" "The devil sweep the box an' Mistor Lisle, too; it was all through the shonen that the trouble came, had seran to him!" "Well, and what do you want me to do for you now? The governor will not be pleased to hear of your leaving the railway after yourself speaking for you, Tim. It is a terrible rolling stone you are lately, Tim."

"Shure, yer honour doesn't mane that now; fur if I could only retire into private life, get some nice situation up a respectable, civil-spoken family, faith you'd see how comfortable I'd be, but I'm nappu to serve them, an' not clear of loike Sheedy did."

"I think I see your meaning, Tim. Well, it is true Sheedy left us in a bit of a fix, and as you are a good driver and handy man I will speak to my father for you. You would be willing to make yourself useful in the house by helping the maids, I suppose?"

"That 'ud, yer honour; I'm a great hand at helping the women. I don't think I 'ud do for the darlins, an' if yer honour 'ud say a good word fur me, bedad it's yer sarvant fur life I am."

"Very well, Tim. I'll see what I can do, but remember, we must have none of your old tricks and scraps you know."

"Yerah, never a spree, an' the Lord give me strength. Shure, it's the fairs open-hearted gentleman ye are, Masther Hugh."

"Have you seen anything of the young lady of the Castle since her arrival?" "Ne'er a sight, yer honour; an' it's sorry I am for her sake that the best of the fish has put in an appearance again. I believe that Mr. a bad lot, an' I wouldn't trust him further than I could kick him, sorr."

High coloured, and an anxious expression came into his face as he made answer: "Oh, you must not say such a thing unless you are positive of the truth of it. Mr. Lisle may be all right, you are prejudiced against him, Tim."

"Well, bedad, maybe I am, and maybe I'm not, for happen I know more about the gentleman than you think, sorr. An' savin' yer presence it isn't on the same side as you think, sorr. I'd trust a sister av mine if I had one," said Tim in a mysterious tone. Yet though Hugh instinctively felt that the honest, out-spoken porter knew more than his words expressed, he did not see the conversation in response a hearty "Good luck to ye!" rode off in the opposite direction in hopes of still encountering his fair friend from Killeen Castle."

It was a beautiful morning that followed the arrival of Evelyn Fitzgerald at her uncle's house. The strangeness of her welcome had left a disagreeable impression on her mind and despite that her uncle seemed genuinely pleased to see her, and that Lady Lisle was also friendly in her greeting, she could not but feel at home. She was not an early riser on this occasion, and Sir Geoffrey having gone out shooting and Lady Lisle being still in bed the girl went off alone. She was so fresh and bright that she longed for a stroll outside; so donning her walking costume, she bade her maid inform Lady Lisle she had gone out, but would not be away very long. The girl decided she was just paying her ladyship back in her own coin for her very discourteous treatment of her guest, and though her heart was full of overflowing at the reception given her, Evelyn was too old and sensitive to let them see that she was pained by their coldness. The girl walked fast, as though that was the only means of drawing her sorrow, and soon was out of her uncle's grounds and upon the cliff road. "I will show them I do not care, that I can be independent of their society, can enjoy myself alone," she told herself, trying in vain to gulp down the lump which unbidden rose in her throat. Hitherto she had walked along, unmindful of anything around her, her mind usually so quick to recognize and enjoy the beauties of nature, too full of her own affairs to notice her surroundings. Suddenly she was startled by the loud peal of a bicycle bell and on looking up beheld a gentleman spring from his bicycle and come towards her with raised cap and smiling face. "This is indeed a pleasure, Miss Fitzgerald. I hope you have recovered from your fatiguing journey?" the rich musical voice of Hugh de Lacy inquired. Evelyn's eyes sparkled again as she recognized her one friend in Killeen, and she gave him a hearty greeting. "The pleasure is mutual, Mr. de Lacy and I am quite recovered thank you; in fact, I am already taking your advice and come to explore the beauties of which you told me yesterday. Do you not think me of a very impatient young lady to be in such a hurry like a little spoiled child with a new toy?" The young man laughed. "I, at least, am the gainer by your impatience. It is also flattering to our country, and perhaps the humble instigator of that desire may be allowed to act as guide and point out the natural beauties of which we natives are so proud, Miss Fitzgerald."

"You are very kind, and as you have before proved your generosity, I am again tempted to impose on your good nature Mr. De Lacy. You may, however, repent your offer, as I bring kindness too much."

"You could not do that. My time is always at your disposal if it is not saving too much, Miss Fitzgerald. The girl felt pleased at the offer given by this heart-broken spirit and gained the feeling that she had secured at least one friend in Killeen who might compensate for the coldness of her relatives, brighter her life by a little genial companionship, arose in her mind. It was a lovely day when they started. As they strolled along both were enchanted by the scene before them, and never noticed the approach of a small black cloud, no other ready an' willing to undertake decent work, an' serve a respectable master."

Long as he had known and loved the neighbourhood Hugh had never before realized its wild rugged grandeur as he did that day. Was it the charm of pleasant companionship or the unstinted admiration of the girl beside him that opened his eyes to the full value, and romantic, savage beauty of his surroundings? They had gone some distance—the young man wheeled his machine on gaining the crest of a steep hill the girl descried in the valley below her what seemed to her to be the ruins of a former village or fishing hamlet. To her exceeding astonishment of not one of the small collection of what must at one time have been smiling comfortable cabins was there, nor were there any of the windows or the roofs of the partly-decaying thatched. And birds were almost razed to the ground and showed only a bare wall or two of foundation. Evelyn gazed upon the melancholy sight in surprise and horror. At last she turned to her companion. "What place is that?" she inquired eagerly. "How terrible to see so many vacant homes!" The young man looked upon her gravely. "Are you afraid if you remain long here you will witness many similar sights?" he answered; "our country is full of such. Many a happy, thriving family has been turned adrift from their homesteads, the place left desolate, like that which now meets your eye. But I am tired, you perhaps with such tales. Let us walk on and strive to forget them. Miss Fitzgerald."

The girl gazed at him in amazement. "Forget them! Why should we? No; I wish to learn all about it. You do not tell me the name remains, and on one occasion was some jangling the clearing of some of the roadways through Assam. It was customary after the day's work was done for my father and his men to resort to the nearest village and put up for the night. Keep Out of the Wet!

Raincoat Paragraphs!

If you don't happen to possess a Raincoat you'll want one when you read this. A Raincoat is great comfort and protection on a wet day. It's the most useful member of a man's wardrobe.

It's better to have a Raincoat than to get a cold followed by a doctor's bill. Our rainproofs shed water like a duck's back. They will stand a deluge. In dry weather they keep you warm. In wet weather they keep you dry. They are Rainproofs and Overcoats combined. They come in all the new styles—in the latest materials and we have so many sizes that we can fit any man.

DOWN GO THE PRICES!

We're stocktaking and want to clear the goods quickly.

If you've an eye for economy it won't take you long to note the advantages of buying a Raincoat here.

The goods must go—we've priced them to go—we mean that they SHALL go—hence these small prices.

THE HOME OF THE FUTURE.

Professor Otto Erik, of Denmark, has for some time now been giving much attention to the solution of the housing and security question, which has become somewhat acute in Copenhagen, the capital of his country, as in most other parts of Europe.

The idea that from twenty-five to thirty families of the better situated class, such as can afford to employ a servant, should maintain an equal number of cooks, when all the cooking necessary might as well be done in one place, and the expense, seemed to Professor Erik, and the idea of a central kitchen immediately suggested itself to him.

After some time his present plan evolved in detail and he submitted it to various business men, most of whom, however, assured him that, though they could see many advantages in it, they did not think it was worth the trouble of carrying it out. He thought it could be carried out in the working abroad. This, however, the Professor proved to be incorrect.

He began the building of his central house in the city of Copenhagen, which he called the "Home of the Future." The first of its kind anywhere in the world, it is built in all its essential parts like any modern house, but with a few peculiarities of its own.

It is a very interesting and important experiment, and it is hoped that it will be followed by other cities.

In judging dairy stock, 100 is assumed to represent the ideal or perfect dairy cow. The following is a list of the general qualities and particular points to be considered.

GENERAL APPEARANCE.

Constitutional vigor, as shown by size, appearance of health, activity, strength, and general appearance.

HEAD AND NECK.

Forehead, broad and full. Horns, small and fine, not too long, set well apart, bright, and yet placid.

CHEST AND QUARTERS.

Chest and brisket, broad and strong, low, but not too fleshy. Ribs, large, well defined, firm, and lean.

HIND QUARTERS.

Hips, wide apart. Pelvic arch, prominent and strong. Rump, long and wide.

OLD INNS IN SPAIN.

In out-of-the-way posts in Spain the traveler may hap upon queer old inns, carried on very much in the manner of the Middle Ages.

Such a wanderer as Mr. Edgar Wharm, with a keen eye for odd things and old people, remarks that the old inns are not all equally attractive survivors.

Externally the village inn suggests an abandoned cowshed, and the interior is introduced to one with something bordering on despair.

The villagers were dancing before the door at the moment of our arrival, but the hall was at once interrupted to interview such an extraordinary visitor.

A GIRL PATRIOT.

A Slovenian girl of tender age, who in 1848 was threatening her native land, saw her neighbors and other members of her own family earnestly at work to help to repel the invader.

Before noon she had walked to Ljubljana, where she was fortunate enough to find a patriot.

GUARDING THE KAISER.

The Kaiser has always been one of the boldest monarchs in Europe, and it is entirely due to the fact that he is so well guarded.

At Breslau the Kaiser exhibited the beautiful pieces which had come into his possession, and told the story of the girl who had saved his life.

MARIE VON VELTHEIM.

KNOWS WHERE KRUGER'S GOLD IS HIDDEN.

After the occupation of Pretoria by the British, and the voyage of President Kruger to Europe, it was rumoured that the ex-President had entrusted the treasure of the South African Republic to some friends to hide until the Boers should "come into their own again."

A WOMAN WHO CAN KEEP A SECRET.

Marie von Veltheim, the wife of Ludwig von Veltheim, has been the subject of a "living" example in disproof of the idea that a member of the fair sex is incapable of keeping a secret.

It is about eleven years since Marie Yersley, an English girl of sixteen, met Ludwig von Veltheim in Australia.

Marie von Veltheim told her that she was a German, and that she was at that time travelling in Australia as a German secret-service agent.

She will wait yet awhile for news of her husband, and she may open the packet and make an effort to recover the buried gold for the benefit of her son.

THE PLOT TO KIDNAP KRUGER.

The German soldier of fortune, for that is what he seemed to be, made the acquaintance of Barnato, the South African millionaire, and his subsequent history is given in a summarized brief.

A plan was evolved for kidnapping President Kruger and some of his councilors, but Barnato's unexpected death made an alteration in the scheme.

On these sections there will be, of course, no local traffic, and to attract the through traffic the roads will be elaborately prepared.

TO SAVE THE GOLD FROM THE BRITISH.

Von Veltheim was placed in charge of a company and took part in several important engagements. So well and so bravely did the captain comport himself that he gained esteem and confidence of President Kruger.

President Kruger intended to leave South Africa. He did not wish to see the Transvaal republic fall into the hands of the enemy, and he could not well take it with him.

In the dead of night the four men conveyed the treasure to the Transvaal mountains and buried it in a cave. Von Veltheim appears to have been the leading spirit of the midnight expedition, and he took the leadings of the surrounding country.

VELTHEIM GOES TO LONDON.

He made a chart of the surrounding country, indicating the exact spots where the chests were hidden; of this chart he made a duplicate some time later.

Wages are rising in Japan; but even skilled hands rarely get more than two shillings a day. Twenty years ago the average was sixpence a day.

RESOURCEFULNESS AT HOME.

Never throw away empty cotton-reels; they have a hundred uses. In most kitchens there are a number of cotton-reels on which aprons and cloths are hung.

WHEN WILL SHE OPEN THE PACKET?

She has endeavored to trace him, but with very little result. She went to Trieste, and there in January, 1903, or about a year after he was supposed to have left the place.

THE WORLD'S MOST WONDERFUL RAILWAY.

On the 8th of June last, the Tsar formally ratified a resolution of the Council of Ministers in favour of commencing forthwith the construction of a railway from Kamsk, Siberia, to the Behring Straits.

BURIED BEAUTY.

There was a soft tenderness in the sweet evening breeze, and the passengers on the luxurious pleasure steamer, having just finished a really good dinner, were enjoying the beauties of the evening to the full.

PROTECTION AGAINST GNATS AND MOSQUITOES.

Jrs. M. Otto and R. O. Neumann have tested about thirty different preventative against gnats and mosquitoes. Amongst these were the volatile oils, which by reason of their powerful odour is so peculiarly adapted for this purpose.

PAPER MILK BOTTLES.

Butter is received in tubes and cut into blocks and put into neat paper boxes; lard is also so handled; oysters are dipped from tin into neat paper paper-ice-cream tub into neat paper buckets; eggs are sold in paper buckets; eggs are sold in paper buckets; eggs are sold in paper buckets.

CURIOSITIES OF ROYAL ETIQUETTE.

When the King or Queen sign their names in the visitors' book a new pen must always be provided. It is not used by the other guests or even the host or hostess unless it is handed to them by their Majesties.

LOVELY LANDSCAPES FOR MERMAIDS ONLY.

Much of the finest scenery on the face of the globe is to be found in the sea, says "Smith's Weekly." For instance, the remarkable monolith, more than 5,000 feet in height, discovered by the "Andros" in mid-ocean some 300 miles off the coast of Chili.

SCENERY THAT TRIPPERS NEVER SEE.

One of the most striking picture-que bits of submarine scenery lies in comparatively close proximity to the British Islands. For a distance of about 230 miles to the westward of Ireland the ocean bed slopes so gradually that the average increase in the depth of the water is only about six feet per mile; but in the next few miles it drops suddenly, in a series of tremendous steps or terraces, to a depth of 10,000 feet.

THE RHCORNS ARE THE THICKEST-SKINNED QUADRUPEDS.

The rhinoceros is the thickest-skinned quadruped, its hide being tough enough to resist the claws of a lion or tiger, the horns of a sword and the balls of an old-fashioned musket.

THE BUILDINGS OF THE SERAGLIO AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

The buildings of the Seraglio at Constantinople can accommodate 20,000 people with ease. The number of horses in Europe available for military purposes is reckoned at about thirty-nine millions.

THE BODYGUARDS OF THE EUROPEAN SOVEREIGNS.

The bodyguards of all European Sovereigns consist of men chosen for their fine physique and great strength. A marine-store dealer may not buy of any person apparently less than sixteen years old, nor cut any rope more than five fathoms long without an order from a magistrate.

ONE WOULD IMAGINE COAL-MINING TO BE LITTLE SHORT OF A GREAT OCCUPATION.

One would imagine coal-mining to be little short of a great occupation, but the coal-dust-laden air, the cramped position, and the damp and confinement generally ever attendant upon the work, are all so threatening to the health and life of the miner that the death-rate is barely nine per 1,000.

Beaufort Fire Brigade.

The adjourned monthly meeting of the above was held in the brigade-room on Thursday evening. There were eight members present, and Foreman Welsh, in the temporary absence of Captain Sinclair, occupied the chair. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

The following correspondence was received.—From T. Grouse, secretary of the Country Fire Brigades Board, approving of the appointment of W. Hannah as a member of the brigade. From same, notifying that the name of the late Lieut. Baker has been removed from the roll. From same, approving of the appointment of Brigadier Andrew, as lieutenant. Other routine correspondence was received from the Country Fire Brigades Board and the Waltham Fire Brigade.

From Captain John Lynch, Brigadier, re publication of a fire brigades' newspaper, notifying that the matter will be dealt with at the next meeting of captains, to be held at an early date, and asking for help of brigade. It was decided to hold the matter over till next meeting, pending inquiry by the secretary. Apologies were received from Brigadiers Andrews, Tyrrell, and Lilley. Captain Sinclair arrived at this stage, and took the chair.

An account (as) from S. Baker for fire-wood was passed for payment. In regard to making of fire-plug in front of the station for practice, it was decided to limit the cost of the job to £2; the arrangements to be left in the captain's hands. In regard to the proposed sports meeting and concert for the purpose of raising funds to purchase a demonstration reel, Secretary Pedder remarked that something should be done at once, as the time was getting very close. Personally, he thought they need not go to the trouble of running a sports meeting, but just have the concert. There was £11 in allowances that could go towards it, if members were agreeable, and £2 10s of their funds would be left after the new plug had been put in. If they put their shoulders to the wheel they should have a new reel by Christmas. The trouble was that they did not want to pay any money, and would have to go round cadging for trophies; and that would take a long time and a lot of battling.

In answer to the captain, the secretary said he would not attempt to act as sports secretary, as he was studying for an examination. But he thought he could act as secretary for a concert only.

After a long discussion as to ways and means, it was resolved to purchase a new reel for about £32, the members agreeing to contribute their allowances, and a circular, explaining the object, and soliciting donations towards it, to be distributed around the district.

It was thought a Ballarat troupe could be engaged for about £8 or £10. Secretary Pedder then moved that the motion on the books re holding a sports meeting be rescinded, that a concert be held instead, and that a committee be formed to carry out the arrangements. Seconded by Brigadier Hains, and carried.

Captain Sinclair thought they could fix the concert for about the first week in December. Captain Sinclair, Secretary Pedder, Foreman Welsh, Lieut. Hains, and Brigadier H. Stuart were appointed, on motion of Brigadiers Hellyer and Baker, as a concert committee, with power to carry out the arrangements and fix the date.

Captain Sinclair then remarked that he was very pleased to announce that their appeal on behalf of their late lieutenant, W. Baker's widow and family had turned out very satisfactorily indeed. When he took the matter up he had not anticipated anything like what they had received. The total receipts from the citizens of Beaufort, the different fire brigades, and from district people brought the total up to £108 10s. In this there were several unacknowledged fire brigade donations of £1 from Mr. J. B. Cochran. The brigadiers had cause to be thankful to the people of the town and district, and their courtesies of assistance in the fire service for this. 61 brigades had responded out of the 99 appealed to. He had the list here, and it had been gone over and checked, and nearly every amount had been acknowledged in the local paper. During the last few weeks he had received the following donations from other brigades:—Ruparup, 10s 6d; Beechworth, 5s; Kyabram, 10s 6d; Avoca, 10s 6d; Wychee, 10s 6d; and Benalla, 10s 6d. These had come in since the last lot had been acknowledged. In the bank at the present time there was a balance of £78 17s. It was a remarkable thing that he had collected in cash £100 to a shilling. There had been a little expenditure. As their captain had handed them the sum of £78 17s, and left it in their hands to do what they liked with it.

After discussion as to whether it should be given to the widow in a lump sum or in instalments, it was resolved to defer the matter till next meeting.

Golf.

Last Saturday afternoon a most interesting and enjoyable golf match was played at "Lumonde," Stockyard Hill, between a team of twelve players from the Beaufort golf club and a team representing Stockyard Hill. The game was very close, and was very finely contested with the visitors. The best rounds were done by Misses Harris (77), B. McDonald (78), McRae (81), and M. Hannah (91); and by Messrs Williams (55), McLay (63), P. Hannah (67), Canton (68), and Wood (68). The players and all others present were most hospitably entertained by Mr and Mrs Hannah. The return match is to be played on the Beaufort links on the 29th inst.

Mr Bent stated on Tuesday night in the Legislative Assembly that the new income tax schedule would make an all-round reduction of 20 per cent. on the present one, except in the case of companies, which will continue to pay as at present. Donations to charitable objects in sums of over £20 would be exempt from income tax. For instance, if a taxpayer gave £100 to charity he would be allowed to deduct that sum from the taxable amount of his income. A similar exemption will be made in the Probate Bill. For the financial year ended 30th June last the income tax yielded £365,135 for the preceding year. The exemption has been fixed at £150.

Social and Presentation to Mr. B. E. Carthew.

Mr. B. E. Carthew, who has been stationed at the Beaufort Post Office for the past four years, and has recently been promoted to the rank of telegraph operator and transferred to Stawell, was on Tuesday night entertained at a social in the St. John's Parish Hall, prior to his departure. There was a large gathering present, including representatives of other denominations.

The Rev. Chas. Reed endorsed all that Mr. Carthew had said with regard to Mr. Carthew's qualifications as an officer. He would be greatly missed by those doing business with the Post Office. St. John's would also feel the loss of his valuable assistance in the choir. As a chorister and a church member, he had been very regular and reliable, and his voice had been of great assistance in the musical part of the services. He wished him all happiness and prosperity in Stawell.

Mr. J. M. Carroll said he was glad of an opportunity to express his appreciation of Mr. Carthew's ability and conscientious work as an officer. He had known Mr. Carthew as a boy in knickerbockers, when he lived in Horsman. As a junior in the Horsman Post Office he had displayed the same obliging disposition and the same care in his work as at Beaufort. On behalf of the Presbyterian Church, he would like to acknowledge Mr. Carthew's kindness in so frequently assisting as a vocalist at socials and concerts in connection with that denomination. Mr. Carthew, he might say, came of a good stock. All the members of the Carthew family, though they were now rather scattered, showed the influence of a good home life and sound training. He would add his best wishes to those already expressed for Mr. Carthew's future.

Mr. J. Eastwood also spoke in high terms of Mr. Carthew, both in his public and social capacity. As an officer he was as kind and obliging to children as to any of the business people of the town. In fact, Mr. Carthew was one of nature's gentlemen. (Applause.) He was always ready to give his help as a singer, but it was in the choir of St. John's that his absence would be most felt. However, he was glad that Mr. Carthew was getting on in the department, and was sure he would continue to do so. He wished him all happiness and prosperity.

Mr. W. H. Babin spoke feelingly of the obliging and attentive way in which Mr. Carthew had always carried out his duties at the post office. In the course of his business he had to deal with a good many officers, but the Beaufort Post Office was the most efficient that he knew. He was glad of the opportunity afforded to acknowledge his indebtedness in this respect to Mr. Carthew, and also to the other officials, who were all equally obliging.

Mr. Carthew, who was received with great enthusiasm, said he had never in his life had to stand up and thank a public audience. With regard to the church, he had been a pleasure to him to do what he could, and he had not done any more than any young member should. In the future his work was made easy for him by Miss Cresser, who had been very kind to him and had made his stay in Beaufort a very pleasant one. Alluding to the telephone work, he said that it was not always plain sailing. On one occasion an exasperated person had asked him over the wire if there was an ass on the telephone, and he had replied, "Not on this end, old man!" (Laughter.) Any services he had been able to render in the vocal line had been a pleasure to him. He thanked them heartily for the very handsome present they had given him.

Refreshments were handed round, and further amusements were indulged in, winding up with Mr. Carthew's popular recitation "Mother and the Kid," which was well received. The young folks immensely enjoyed the evening musical items were given by the following, and were much enjoyed: Miss Ada Jackson (soprano), Miss Edie Stuart, Mrs. A. G. Jackson (soprano), Mrs. Reed, Miss Crowther, Messrs. Carthew, Seager, B. Stuart, and W. Jay.

The evening was concluded with "Auld Lang Syne" and cheers for the departing guest.

Headache, Indigestion and Constipation.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

It will interest sufferers to know that a valuable medicine, called Frotooids, has been discovered, which is now completely curing each of the above-named complaints. Frotooids are elegant in appearance, and pleasant to take, and what is of the utmost importance, are thoroughly reliable in affording quick relief. You do not require to go on taking them for a prolonged period, as is necessary with some medicines, which even then are mostly disappointing; you simply take a dose of Frotooids when ill and repeat the dose if necessary, but generally one dose is quite effective.

Frotooids are immensely more valuable than an ordinary aperient, in so far that they not only get at an ailment, but do remove from the blood, tissues, and internal organs all the waste poisonous matter that is clogging them and choking the channels that lead to and from them. The beneficial effects of Frotooids are evident at once by the disappearance of the ache, the head becoming clear, and a bright, cheery sense of perfect health taking the place of sluggish, depressed feelings, by the liver acting properly, and by the food being properly digested.

Frotooids are the proper aperient medicine to take when your Congestion or Blood Poison is present, or when Congestion of the Brain or Appendix is present or threatening. They have been tested, and have been proved to afford quick relief in such cases when other aperients have not done any good at all. It is of the utmost importance that this should be borne in mind, for in such cases to take an ordinary aperient is to waste time and permit of a serious illness becoming fatal.

Frotooids act splendidly on the liver, and quickly cure bilious attacks that antimonial pills make worse. Many people have been made sick and ill by antimonial pills that could have been cured at once by Frotooids. People should not allow themselves to be duped into contracting a medicine-taking habit by being persuaded to take daily doses with each meal of so-called indigestion cures that do not cure. Frotooids have been subjected to extensive tests, and have in every case proved successful in completely curing the complaint.

A constipated habit of body will be completely cured if the patient will on each occasion, when suffering, take a dose of Frotooids, instead of an ordinary aperient; by so doing, the patient will require doses only at longer intervals, and will so become quite independent of the necessity of taking any aperient medicine.

Frotooids are only now being placed on the Australian market, consequently you may at present have a difficulty in getting them from your local chemist or stockholder, or whom, and if you cannot get them at once, send stamps or postal note, for price, 1/6, to F. G. Hearn, Chemist, Geelong, and a bottle of them will be immediately forwarded to you post free. Chemists, stockholders, and wholesalers can now obtain wholesale supplies from F. G. Hearn, Chemist, Geelong, Victoria.

Too Well Known to Need an "Ad."

This idea that you have lived so long in town that everybody knows you and you don't need to advertise is a mistake. This very indifference to advertisement is doing business as it is done in this day and age, is what has enabled the catalogue or mail order houses to grow from mere nothing to great concerns. The merchant who can convince the people of his section, and keep them convinced, that his store is the best place to buy this and that article, will not lose trade to the mail order house. Of course, he cannot afford to get out a catalogue as thick as a Bible, but he can keep an advertisement in his local paper, and see that it is changed every week, thus keeping new bargains continually before the public. He should also have a mailing list, and send out a circular letter at least once a month. Don't look upon your country newspaper as an object of charity. There is not a single country newspaper in the State, with a general local circulation, which is not able to give full value for money received. The country papers can help you solve this question if you give them a chance.—Ed. K. Slater, in "Merchants' Record and Show Window."

During last year the number of scholars attending State schools increased by about 3000, and this has created a demand for additional teachers. Mr. McLeod, Minister of Mines, has promised to be before the Cabinet next week to propose a bill to amend the law should be amended, that only the Mint and banks would be empowered to buy gold.

Mr. Mathew, the newly-elected member for Southern Melbourne, informed the members of the House of Representatives that he was pleased to belong to the Labor party. "To read the newspaper criticisms of the labor members," he said, "one would think that we were a terrible party of incendiaries, trying to stir the people by submerging them in a pin of fire." Mr. Mathew had no difficulty in proving that this was not the case.

At the meeting of the St. Annand Agricultural Society, a letter was received from Mr. H. W. H. Irvine, M.H.R., stating: "I am very glad to hear that you will propose any increase on agricultural implements. Though I am a protectionist, I do not believe in prohibitive protection, and never did. I am quite satisfied that the Government will support the proposals of the chairman of the Tariff Commission instead of the Government's as being the best way out of the difficulty. I am totally opposed at all times to excessive duties, and at the same time I recognize the absolute necessity of protective duties to establish and encourage industries, but these should not be so protected to become a burden and a tax on the people. I quite agree with your committee, and will do all I can to help out of the proposal duties reduced."

TAKING HIM DOWN.

Several lawyers, witnesses, jurors, and litigants left the county town by train at the close of the assizes. The sedate-looking gentleman took his seat directly opposite a young solicitor. "I am on my feet, you know," you picked up the pretty hard yesterday," the gentleman said as an introduction, "and I have been a little curious about you ever since."

"The passenger were all interested, and the sedate man continued. "You seem to be a person of superior intelligence, and there are one or two little matters I want to ask you about. Now, if I were to say to you that the three faces which include a triangular face of a prism are equal to the three sides of a second prism, each to each, and are like plain in all their parts, what would you understand by it?"

"Why, really, sir—um— " "You don't mean to tell me you're taken by a question like that? Well, never mind, here's something easier. If I were to suggest to you that a certain object is a polyhedron, equal in all their parts and having their homologous sides parallel, what would be the impression conveyed in your mind?"

"Well, the subject—or is—or one I've never looked into deeply," gasped the young lawyer. "Do you mean to own that you wouldn't know it was just a plain everyday prism? I've got a boy at school, and he would know it, and whose question wouldn't stopp to think."

FIRST ENGLISH COFFEE-HOUSE.

The earliest record of a coffee-house in London dates back to the year 1550. It was then opened in the parish of St. Peter, Oxford, by a Jew named Jacobus. The first London coffee-house was started in St. Michael's Alley, Cornhill, in 1652, and of this account is more complete. An Englishman, Daniel Edwards, brought some coffee home from Smyrna, and the novel beverage created such a sensation that his house was soon thronged. To save himself from this annoyance Edwards established his Greek servant Paquas in a public coffee-house, which he knew how to roast and serve the fragrant berry, and did good business in partnership with one Bowman, under the sign of a Turk's head.

DIDN'T USE WEIGHTS.

A baker in Lubek, Germany, who for some time had obtained his whole supply of butter from a dairy near the city, noticed a deficiency in the weight and took the precaution of carefully weighing the exact weight of each supply. He found the same every time more or less deficient, until he lost patience and summoned the dairyman before the Court for supplying short weight butter. When before the Court the dairyman was asked by the presiding magistrate whether he used proper scales for weighing the butter, to which the dairyman replied in the affirmative. "And as to your weights, have they been tested lately?" queried the magistrate.

"BROTHER JONATHAN."

The origin of the term "Brother Jonathan," as a personification of the United States, has been given. When appointed as commander of the army of the revolutionary war, went to Massachusetts to organize a circular letter at least once a month. Don't look upon your country newspaper as an object of charity. There is not a single country newspaper in the State, with a general local circulation, which is not able to give full value for money received. The country papers can help you solve this question if you give them a chance.—Ed. K. Slater, in "Merchants' Record and Show Window."

THE FIRST STARCHER.

Starch originated in Flanders. It was introduced into England, with the big ruff, in the time of Queen Elizabeth. It was like our starch of today, except that it was made in a coloured, red, yellow, green, blue. The effect of this was to tint delicately the white linen to which the starch might be applied.

Before Queen Elizabeth's time ruffles and ruffs were made of fine holland, which required no stiffening. Then the ruffs came, and with them the necessity of starching. It is recorded that when the Queen had ruffs made of lawn and cambric for her own wearing, there was no one in England who could tell how to starch them; but the Queen made enquiries for some woman who could starch lawn, and an extra 20s. for the royal coachman, was the first starcher.

In 1854 a Flanders woman, Frau Van Emmeron, first came to London and established there a school for the teaching of starching. The school succeeded, and the Flanders flour got rich. She charged 25s a lesson, and an extra 20s. for recipe for the making of starch out of wheat-flour, bran, and roots. The ten American poets who are generally placed in the front rank are: Emerson, Poe, Longfellow, Bryant, Whittier, Halleck, Lowell, Holmes, and a few others—Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and Mr. R. W. Terry Cooke.

THE PRINCE AND MAGUIAN.

Once there was a king who had a little boy whom he loved. He gave him beautiful rooms to live in, and pictures, and toys, and a horse. He gave him a pony, and a dog, and a cat, and a parrot, and a servant. He provided teachers who were to teach him lessons that would make him good and great.

But for all this the young prince was not happy. He wore a crown wherever he went, and always wishing for something new. At length, one day, a magician came to court. He saw the boy and said to the king, "I can make your son happy, but you must pay me a great price for the secret."

"Well, said the king, whatever you will give me." So the price was paid. Then the magician took the boy into a private room. He wrote something with a white substance on a piece of paper, and on the top of the boy's head, and held it under the paper and then saw what he could read. He then went away, and the white letters turned into a beautiful boy. They formed these words: "Do a kindness to someone every day."

The prince made use of the secret, and soon became the happiest boy in the kingdom.

LEAVING THE NEST.

The mother who fancies that she can hold the heart of son or daughter by thrusting her own loneliness, or regret, or pang upon them, and then, when they are a happy, reasonable marriage, makes the most fatal mistake which a blinded judgment can make. A woman sympathizing with the heart of God and Nature has planted in their young hearts, a generous desire which it is ordained should carry human lives onward in the great progress of the world, will refresh the springs of love in a child's heart, and draw the souls of parent and offspring closer together. What is all unselfish parental life but a long self-abnegation? Long, beyond the desire which it is ordained should carry human lives onward in the great progress of the world, will refresh the springs of love in a child's heart, and draw the souls of parent and offspring closer together.
