A STORY OF A TREASURE ISLAND IN THE INDIAN OCEAN.

By Seward W. Hopkins, Author of "A Baffled Importer," etc.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS PARTS.

The central idea of the story turns upon the recovery of a box containing enormous treasure, which years before had been buried on an island of the Indian Ocean by Stephen Dorsey, a wealthy retired officer of the East India Company.

Oliver thanked the young fellow again, and also blessed his lucky stars that he had had the good fortune to fall in with such a friend.

Oliver arrived in New York on a cold, blustery evening early in November. When he stepped from the train, he realized that he was once more in the great city that had been his birthplace, his heart burdened with joy and gratitude.

Oliver, with white face and quivering lip, was now walking to and fro, unmindful of his weakness. He drained the glass slowly, and his companion's hand on his shoulder.

THE GARDEN.

HOW TO MAKE DWARF TREES.

THE AMATEUR CAN DO IT.

How gardeners manage to grow miniature pines, firs, and oaks in flower-pots for half a century has always been more or less of a secret.

The end of the tap-root is generally made to rest on the bottom of the pan, or on a flat stone within it. Alluvial clay is then put into the pot.

Then, too, the top and side roots, which are within easy reach of the gardener, are shortened by means of a pruning knife, or are secured with a hot iron.

Another of his innovations was to give away free to every purchaser accompanied by a child a toy balloon bearing the name of his shop.

His careful forethought even extended to his funeral. He deposited the sum of £4,000 many years before his death with the undertakers, and gave orders that it should be done in style.

There were two actresses in an early play of mine," said an author, "both very beautiful; but the leading actress was thin."

NOV. 27th FEBRUARY 1915.
Mr. C. Hamlin, President
Mr. J. H. H. ...

work on the collars, for all registered dogs in the shire, as it would be a great advantage to collectors.—Cr. Stewart was in favor of tags on collars, but not on dogs. The secretary said the cost in Haunpennyshire of tags and collars was £100 per annum, and asked whether the council would pay the lot of the inspectors' pay. The secretary said in Haunpennyshire the owners found the collars and the council the tags. Cr. Roddis said it was not necessary for tags in the West and East Ridings. Cr. Stewart said the council should pay the lot of the inspectors' pay. Cr. Roddis said the council should pay the lot of the inspectors' pay. Cr. GENERAL BUSINESS.
Cr. Roddis asked the engineer to bring up a report as to the state of the blind bridge at Carngham, which had a broken plank.—To be attended to.
Cr. Trengove said that a number of ratepayers in the North Riding who were living within the area of the Lake Goldsmith common were harassed from putting stock there. The president and Cr. Stewart said the matter was being dealt with it after lunch.
Cr. Roddis said that metalled roads that had been washed by the rain should be blinded.
The president said the matter having been brought under his notice he took it upon himself to write to the secretary for the Joint Water Supply and ask that the railway gates at Beaufort should not be locked till 5 o'clock, instead of 1 o'clock, on Saturdays, but had only received an acknowledgment. To his mind they might as well close up the station to passengers as prevent farmers from bringing in their produce. He hoped his action would be approved. President's motion endorsed on motion of Crs. Sinclair and Stewart.
Cr. Slater complained of the travelling sheep nuisance, and moved that the ranger take action against those in charge who were not travelling the proper distance—three or four miles a day—would be reasonable. Some were not travelling three miles a day. Seconded by Cr. Stewart, who said that 300 sheep had been camped in the lane and were being watered in Cr. Slater's and the Minter's paddocks.
Cr. Roddis thought the same should apply to the East, but mentioned that a request had been made to the Minter to suspend the law during the drought.
Cr. Sinclair said two miles had been suggested instead of six. Cr. Lewis supported the motion, remarking that the same man had been in the East Riding for weeks, making the one camping place and travelling in different directions to another.
The president said he had had a lot of trouble with travelling stock, and had found six carcasses thrown over his fence. The council should deal very sympathetically with men on the roads with sheep. He would be very sorry to make them travel even three miles a day. To his mind the ranger had been too severe, and if he got instructions it would hamper these men. He sincerely hoped that rain would soon come, so that they would be able to go back to the moor. He mentioned a case where one man had fed his sheep on molasses and straw, and was forced to travel them, but they were so weak that it was impossible to travel three miles a day. In such cases they would do a great injustice by carrying the motion. It would be rather hard-hearted at present, and he would like to see it withdrawn, as the ranger was doing all he could to move the sheep along at a fair rate.
Cr. Slater had had a good deal of experience with travelling sheep, and was sure that any he had seen in the district could easily travel six miles a day.
The president—What is the difference you would get others there.
Cr. Slater—If they were eating your grass and drinking your water, you would soon sing out.
Cr. Stewart said the man who was travelling sheep from the North to the coast had his sympathy, but the man Cr. Slater complained of had been there a long time. The ranger was doing his best, and he had told him not to be too hard.
The president would not like to see the motion on their books.
Cr. Slater, in different, I would like to see on the books.
Cr. Roddis did not think it fair to the man following that one man should be allowed to eat the grass out. He should be moved on.
After further discussion, it was decided that the herdsman's attention be drawn to the matter: Cr. Lewis being informed that where there was no ranger the surfacesmen would be asked to attend to it.
Cr. Hainin drew attention to the action taken by the Beaufort Agricultural Society (renamed elsewhere) re getting of laths, and moved that the Lands Department be written to and asked that work be found for the unemployed in connection with the forests for local mines. Seconded by Cr. Sinclair, and carried.

A STORY OF A TREASURE ISLAND IN THE INDIAN OCEAN. By Seward W. Hopkins, Author of "A Battered Impostor," etc.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS PARTS.

The central idea of the story turns upon the recovery of a box containing enormous treasure, which years before had been buried on an island of the Indian Ocean by Stephen Dorsey, a wealthy retired officer of the East India Company. Malcolm Dorsey, an impetuous young man, who lived a good deal on his wits, is a descendant of the East India officer. He inherits from his uncle a country house, called Hegdelawn, and discovers in the attic a brass plate with broken sentences carelessly written across it, accompanied by a document setting forth all the conditions under which the treasure was concealed on the island about one hundred years before, and stating that three similar plates were in existence that would, when placed together, reveal the latitude and longitude of the island, and the exact spot where the treasure was to be found. The original owners of the other three brass plates were Don Antonio Estraneo, a Spaniard, Phelim Burke, an Irishman, and Solomon Isaacs, a Jew—each of whom had also buried a box of treasure on the island. Notwithstanding the lapse of time since the treasure was buried, Malcolm Dorsey, with the aid of his friend Richard Baytridge, manages to locate the island. By the sale of the mansion he was placed in possession of £4,000. The purchaser, Leviticus Isaacs, a money-lender, learns from the caretaker that Dorsey had placed a high value on the brass plate he had taken from the attic, and when the fact is mentioned to his uncle, Oliver, who is the latter's eyesight with satisfaction, for a similar brass plate has reposed in his iron safe for many years, and he at once concludes there is some connection between the two, more especially as the story connected with it related to some hidden treasure. The reader next learns that plate No. 3 turns up at the death of Don Antonio Estraneo, the wealthy New York merchant. A fortune of £20,000 is left to Oliver and Louise, son and daughter of the deceased. The sole executor of the will is their uncle, Richard Baytridge, an unscrupulous scoundrel. Six months after his father's death, young Oliver, while on board his yacht alone at night, is brutally assaulted, and thrown into the East River, his assailant making good his escape some few days later. Richard Baytridge identifies a body taken from the river as that of his nephew, and the supposed Oliver is buried with pomp and ceremony. Louise is heartbroken by the loss of her brother, so her uncle and aunt decide to take her away, travelling to England and the Continent. Oliver Baytridge, however, is rescued from the river by the crew of the Marietta, a vessel bound for Cuba on a filibustering expedition. When nearing their destination, the Marietta is brought to bay by the Spanish armoured despatch boat Infanta, and Oliver, still very ill, is taken on board and nursed by Senorita Isabel, who with her father, Don Alphonso Galbre, is on board the gunboat. Arriving at Havana the prisoners, including Oliver, are thrown into prison. But Don Alphonso, using his influence, causes them to be released. Young Baytridge eventually arrives in New York, and finds his house deserted. He calls on his friend Stapleton, who, naturally, is surprised at Oliver's return. Comparing notes, they decide to follow Richard Baytridge to Paris, in the hope of rescuing Louise, and in due time sail for England. Mr. Dorsey continues his search for the missing plates, and learns that old Moses Isaacs, the money-lender has one; another he uncovers at Madrid in possession of Don Alphonso Galbre, thus leaving one plate to be accounted for. Acting on the suggestion of the don, Dorsey advertises for the descendant of Phelim Burke, who has a brass plate in his keeping, and receives a call from one who claims to be Andrew Burke, but who in reality is Richard Baytridge, who says he possesses the fourth brass plate. They make an arrangement that all four plate-holders meet at Richard Baytridge's house in Paris, and as the supposed Mr. Burke is entering the station en route for home, he is seen and recognized by Oliver and Stapleton, who follow him to the Rue d'Arly, Paris.

PART 7. CHAPTER XVII. THE PECULIARITIES OF MR. BURKE, CONTINUED—HIS PLANS AND THE MISFORTUNES THAT UPSET THEM.

Mr. Burke, on his arrival at his house in the Rue d'Arly, found no one awake to receive him. So, with that contented mind that had been his since he had met Dorsey, he went to bed and to sleep. On the following morning, however, his loving and ambitious wife was eager to hear all that had been done on the day previous. "Well, she said, as they sat at the breakfast table, 'did you see that Mr. Dorsey?'" "I saw the gentleman," replied Mr. Richard Baytridge. "He is a fine fellow—a very fine fellow—for me."

anything about the family. Who would bother his head to find the plate unless there was wealth to come of it?" "It's so, who would? Well, you are quite right, as usual. It is in the treasure that Dorsey is after."

Paris for treatment, yet wished a quiet neighborhood. There were some American businessmen who had done the same thing, and who had done it well. "Well, he was taken to Montreuil, the Spanish prison at Havana. They shot these filibusters, 'do they not?' asked Mr. Baytridge. 'As a rule. But in this case I interfered. In fact, my daughter threatened to join the rebels unless I had the young man released. I wished to keep him and my daughter apart—not because I felt any dislike for the young man, but because I had grown so dependent on my daughter that I could not bear to have another take her from me. I am assured that this young American was set free, but what then became of him I do not know. But even then I was not clear of trouble. The commander of the gunboat—Dorsey's name was—told me in love with my daughter, and asked her hand of me. Well, of the two I like the American far the better. He had followed us everywhere. He is a very good fellow—Spanish lovers are, as a rule—and I keep my eye on him. There would be a terrible time on if he and the other should meet. He would kill the American—shoot him down like a dog. That's the kind of a man Dorsey is."

"Then he shall meet him," said Dorsey to himself. "I will see to that."

The evening approached. Neither Baytridge nor Don Alphonso had as yet spoken of the treasure-plates. Mr. Baytridge did not wish to seem too eager, and the don did not wish to bring up the subject until Dorsey, in whom he felt confidence, was there to manage the matter. And at last Dorsey came. "Ah! you are alone," said the supposed Mr. Burke, when Dorsey came into the presence of himself and Don Alphonso. "I thought the Jew, old Moses Isaacs, would come with you."

"And so he would have done. It was his intention to do so," said Dorsey, sitting down, and looking soberly at the others. "But an unfortunate occurrence has upset his plans, and so, for a time, our own."

"How? What is it?" asked Mr. Baytridge, eagerly. "Yesterday morning," said Dorsey, "Moses Isaacs was found in his bed with his throat cut, and the subsequent search among his effects has failed to produce anything in the shape of a brass plate. Therefore, gentlemen, there are but three plates to be represented, and one remains to be discovered before the treasure can be discovered."

"The don bowed calmly. Richard Baytridge gasped his teeth."

THE FARM.

THE FARMER AND HIS WORK.

There is an old adage that "He who causes two blades of grass to grow together, one grows before the other public benefactor." If that is true, who shall be said of the man who drains the pestilent swamp, turning his sour clods up to the air and sunshine, causing them to grow grain? What shall be said of the man who removes the stones from a rocky hillside until at last he has a hillside of growing corn? Are not such men benefactors in the highest sense? Oftentimes the farmer is a subject for ridicule. He is represented as lean and lank, with a few straggling hairs on his chin, pantaloons supported by one suspender and wisep of hay in his hair. This is hardly a true picture of the modern farmer. A typical farmer may have handsome showing signs of hard labour, but he has a well-fitting suit of good clothes, good shoes, hat and pocketbook and a pocketbook with money in it.

A farmer is usually handicapped by his isolation. He is far from his neighbours and has little to do with the social courtesies. In this way he sometimes becomes narrow and self-centered. But he also has many advantages. His life is a natural and normal. He comes in close touch with all the beauties of nature. He has more beautiful scenery than that upon which his city brother gazes in the theatre. He listens to concerts more delightful than any ever heard in a concert hall. The farmer represents the absolute necessities of life. If he works not, we eat not. He is tied to the order of Nature, not to the city watches. There is no way in which the bustle and bustle of the city can bring results to pass in his labour. You cannot hasten a field of ripening grain nor hustle an orchard of maturing fruit.

Every boy and girl should live in the country until ten years of age. God pity the boy who is born in a narrow street of a great city, who has not had bits of green grass on which to place his feet, and who never has lain on his back in some upland pasture and watched the white clouds drift across the blue sky, and dreamed of the things he would do when once he became a man.

The farmer is also one of the most independent of men. If he has a fairly good farm he can raise nearly all that is necessary for the supply of his wants. No combination of coal barons can freeze him out, for he raises his own wood; no combination of meat or food producers can starve him out, as he can raise his own food. All the people are dependent upon the farmer and his work. Practically all our products come from the soil. The men in the cities who are centres of business, politics and practice are dependent on the farmer, and are spending the energy which their fathers stored away by a life of hard labour. What society gains on fineness of temper and polish, it loses in strength and force. Society is always dying at the top, but new and vigorous shoots are constantly springing from the soil. The farmer is perfect in his own order and place.

The best way in which we can pay our debt is by giving him the measure of respect that is due his faithful labours.—A. A. Vandervort, in 1908 "New Zealand Dairymen."
