He was always against the carping criticism of a committee or public men by people who stayed away from meetings. Mr Troy probably refused nonshing towards it. The ladies had made good by wiping the debt off in one day. Ings. Mr Troy probably refused nomination as a member of the Mechanics committee, having been a member of the Mechanics. With reference to the offer of a some time and got out. Instead of which the committee worked they could enly use the funds of the institute for eutrent expenses. He wanted to make the members had done. The present committee had given a lot of time to improve the status of the institute and a form of anylic tion for a Govern-the members clear on the stand he took. He contended that before they took action and borrowed for a fund like that there should have been a general meeting and a vote of the subscribers. He had no recollection of that having been thought, was not quite fair in blaming done, and that was why he wrote that the institute, for it must be admitted.

In the letter he simply stated the institute a lot of time to improve the status of the institute, and he thought Mr Troy and every member of the Mechanics' must agree that, during the last 12 months, there was an improvement all round. Mr Troy, he showed that the receipts for December amounted to £37/1/, and for January £19/15/; the credit balance that day being £13. had no recollection of that having been done, and that was why he wrote that the committee for the present state of his objection to their making use of the subscribers' money without permission. This is a state of matters that is very common in the older States of America. It is called "robber" farming, and one of the problems before the agricultural authorities there is the question of getting up the fertility of the land once more, and of endeavouring to get the farmers to practise methods which will not rob the land. We have not got so had as that here yet, because for the most part we have kept up the fertility by manures and feeding stuffs. Still, here and there we come across the case of a farm which has been badly treated, and something more is necessary. Perpetual cultivation, apart from cropping, wastes the humus or vegetable matter, and thus alters the nature of the texture of the soil. It becomes dense and sticky, and in this way the soil is reduced in value. Apart altogether from the question of returning the fertility by actual dressings, it is certain, that liming.
