It merely implies that from a purely basiness point of view he should speed the plough, and keep it working at high tension during the remainder of the sowing season. Even on sheep runs, where it has not yet been brought out, it may be safely used for upwards of another month. In nothing has more marked change taken place in Victorian wheat growing than in regard to the inne of seeding. A few years ago it was held to be essential that the crop should be got in before the end of May. To-day a clean seed bed is considered to be more important than early seeding, and it is not uncommon for sowing to be not anythous the end of May. To-day a clean seed bed is considered to be more important than early seeding, and it is not uncommon for sowing to be continued to the end of dally, and even into August. The landholder, therefore, has ample time in which to lelp himself and serve kia country by secting out to produce as much wheat as possible. Always when sowing late it is advisable to make literal applications of superphosphate, whichis erve to indine a quick growth of the crop in its early stages, and to bring it to maturity in a shorter period. Mr. A. A. Millett, B. Sec, shief-field officer in the Department of Agriculture, recently expressed his conviction that outside the Malles it would pay all Victorian wheat are possible. Always when sowing late it is advisable to make illuseral applications of superphosphate, whether sowing early or late. cannot afford to overlook the definite lessons adduced in yields obtained on private and State farms, and now that wheat is falling in price it becomes increasingly important that they should adopt every means that is likely to increase the acreage returns. Evidence shows that heavier manuring with superphosphate is the simplest, cheapest, and surest method to de that.
