During recent years there has been quite a remarkable invasion of rats to some portions of the district, and the rodents have so established themselves that they now constitute a grave plague. The rats abound in stables, and do a good deal of damage to harness, etc., and notwithstanding the efforts made to reduce their numbers, they continue to multiply and spread. Cr. Pickford, president of the Shire of Ararat, narrated at the council meeting that he had struck upon quite a novel method of coping with the pest. His stable was badly infested, and he trapped and killed many, but, catching one alive, he poured tar over it and then put it into a sack of feathers. When it emerged it was covered to such an extent as to be quite unrecognisable, but it scampered off madly, and the following day Mr Pickford was pleasantly surprised to cold advice by the captain. and the following day Mr Fick- welcomed and given some Pills, and as they seemed a life ford was pleasantly surprised to wood advice by the contain ford was pleasantly surprised to good advice by the captain. The new church committee has been formed. Seven of a committee as a management body have been appointed, including six old ones and one new one.

The P.W. M.U. held their second meeting for the year in the Presbyterian Church. Eleven members were present. The president conducted the meeting, and after the business was gone through, afternoon tea was provided by one of the ladies, and the meeting then closed.

A series of euchre parties and dances are being held in the Public Hall fortnightly for funds for the building.

The new church committee has the financial obligations of the club, and urged the members to do their utmost to ensure à successful season. Twenty-aine couples competidion for a trophy provided by the club. Mrs Watkin and L. Watkin were the winners with a score of 102—29—73; the runners-up being Mrs Troy and D. F. Troy (98—23—75). ### Mr. Business Man!

Keep your new bargains continually before the public through the medium of an advertisement in the "Riponshire Advocate." Bear in mind that advertising always pays, and an "ad" in the local paper, which circulates extensively throughout the district, cannot fail to draw business. It is worth your while to consider a little as to what really is the best means for reaching the people you want to convert into customers. Some business men are rather inclined to be conservative, and follow the course this year that they did years ago. Because they have never tried an advertisement in the "Advocate," they are not inclined to consider this means of reaching the people a safe proposition. The "Advocate" is read by all the family, and lent to friends; and an advertisement still continues to attract attention long after the date of the publication

Author of "The Missing Diamonds," 'The Pride of the Troop," Etc., Etc.

The farmhouse rooms were light and pleasant. With their low ceilings and bright wall papers and chintz, they seemed delightfully cheerful and diminutive to Nancy, after the lofty, gloomy rooms which some eighteenth century architect had designed to match the importance of the Childeroys, when first that august family settled at Field Court. The garden, too, was a tangle of homely, oldfashioned flowers, all a-growing and a-blowing at their own sweet will, seemingly. And the moorland air, with that delightful aromatic tang that comes from heather, and gorse, and pine, blew in through open windows, and brought with it a medley of country sounds, which Clara Webster declared to be far better than any town-made music.

This, however, did not prevent her from tinkling away on an old, highbacked piano, after they had made their first meal in the farmhouse, and when the lamps had been lit. Mrs. Webster was a superb player, and her white fingers, loaded with rings, contrived to extract music even from the poor, faded old instrument which had been fashioned years ago by the dead and gone "Makers to his Majesty the King," whose name it bore. Clara's playing always fascinated

Nancy, and seemed to draw her out of herself. Perhaps Mrs. Webster knew the power that lay in her white fingers; she liked listening to dear Nancy's confidences, and knew how to charm them from her. So she played on softly for a while, without speak ing, while her little friend leaned back in a deep basket-chair and watched her.

"I wish I could play like that," said Nancy, at last; "it must be such a relief when anything happens that makes one feel very deeply." "I used to find it so once," said

Clara, as she played on; "but one is done with romance at my age. And you-you have not begun with it yet, Still she played on softly, and Nancy sat with parted lips, watching her, fascinated. Presently she spoke, scarcely above a whisper. "Clara," she said. The player inclined her head, and the dreamy, sensuous music tinkled more softly.

her shyness in the prosaic light of day. Now, in the soft lamplight, and to the accompaniment of Clara's playing, it seemed easy. L'Clara, I am engaged to be married." Mrs. Webster did not stop playing and burst into profuse congratulations, as a commonplace person would have done; and Nancy liked her the better for it, and felt encouraged to go on speaking about the subject which dominated her thoughts. "I have known him for a long time, and he wouldn't ask me before, because he was poor and in debt. wish he was here. I wish you could know him. His name is Mr. Minto." Was it fancy, or some trick of the lamplight? Clara's face seemed suddeply to harden. The next moment she ended her playing with a few noisy chords, and swung round on her music stool. "Why, Nancy, how charming! Why didn't you tell me before?" she said, all smiles and cordiality. "Is it Tom Minto? Of course I know him. You sly little person, to keep it to yourself all this time!" And she concluded by giving the girl an affectionate "Now, you wouldn't have told me if I hadn't played to you, would you? I'm a conjurer, am I not?' And the remainder of the evening was spent in discussing Nancy's future prospects. The days passed pleasantly and uneventfully for a week; then, one afternoon, on going into the garden Nancy found Mrs. Webster pacing the lawn in company with a handsome, soldierly-looking man, whom she at once recognised as Sir Francis March. He turned to greet her, and she shook hands with him, though without the effusive cordiality that Mrs. Webster thought fit to show him.

"Isn't this charming, Nancy?" the latter lady said. "Sir Francis has been our neighbour for the past week, and we haven't known it." It would not have grieved Nancy had they remained in their former state of ignorance. Sir Francis was a friend of her cousin Strafford's, and had nearly been the cause of a dispute between Lady Childeroy and her beloved grandson. "I am aware, Strafford," the old lady had said, "that, living in the world as you do, you must mix with all sorts and conditions of men. But that man shall never enter my house. And so, whoever might be included in the occasional shooting parties at Field Court, Sir Francis was never invited, for Lady Childeroy had a will of her own. The baronet was about the same age as Mrs. Webster. He was fair to the goint of effeminacy, but there was nothing else effeminate about his appearance. His moustache only pattially hid a very firm mouth. His big, strong teeth betokened a spiendid Bossfitation, which to Adasipation could weaken. His eyes were light in colour, and very keen. "I am already engaged to be mar ried," she said. He made a gesture of despair.

"I ought to have been told," he said, fiercely,

The remark struck Nancy as being odd. Why ought he, more than other casual acquaintances, to have learned the news of her engagement to Tom?

"May I ask if it is to any acquaintance of mine?" he said, presently, with a return to a more natural and ordinary tone of voice

"His name is Mr. Minto." "Tom Minto?"

He looked rather startled "Yes."

"I will hear nothing said against Mr. Minto," said Nancy, sturdily. The obstinate little chin looked more obstinate than ever.

Sir Francis looked down at her pityingly, and said, very quietly, "It is better that you should hear me out." He looked away from the pretty, angry face, and continued 'When you told me you were engage ed to Minto I was startled. I know Minto, and I know that you ought not to marry him. ### HOTELS ON WHEELS.

The largest and most powerful rail engine ever used in the British des has just been introduced by the reat Northern Railway Company. The new locomotive was built to he design of Mr. Gresley, the comany s engineer. It has a total heatsurface of 3,455, square feet, or arly 1,000 square feet more than hat of the company's next biggest engine. The engine and tender together weigh one hundred and fifty tons; combined vehicles can carry right tons of coal, five thousand galons of water, and can haul a load of six hundred tons at fifty-five miles

This mammoth locomotive will be ised to draw the "Flying Scotsman" the express that has left London for Scotland at ten o'clock every morning for more than sixty years. The same company have also built for their Scottish service some new sleeping cars which are the last word in travelling luxury. They have a patent device for preventing rocking. In addition, there are specially constructed heds, hot and cold water, semi-indirect lights which can be dimmed for use as night-lights, and switches controlling the lights, fans, heating ventilators, and bell, which can all be operated by the passenger

The expectations of the Presbyterian soldier settlers on the Chepstowe side of the Trawalla settlement that they would soon be in a position to attend religious service in their own chapel were rudely dispelled by the gale which swept across the settlement on Friday, 18th inst. A mission church from Ballarat East had just been removed to a site on the settlement, but the gale struck it before it had been properly braced and wrecked it completely. A small pipeorgan in the building was also shattered, and severa of the seats were damaged. For the top multiply the area at the Arrangements had been made to open the church on 29th inst., but the ceremony will now have accurately by measuring the cubic con to be postponed indefinitely. It tents of a truss, and from this calcu is doubtful if much of the timber from the wrecked building will be fit to use in the re-crection of the To-morrow or to-night, maybe, you new one, but it is probable that a will lose something that you prize movement will be inaugurated
