steering wheel. The secret of the control lies in the master compass, a gyroscopic compass of great magnetic power, which points due north with dead accuracy, and rights itself instantly on the slightest movement of the ship.

Just as one master electric clock can operate a hundred others in a big building, so the gyro-compass electrically operates a number of repeater compasses placed in different parts of the ship. One only of these repeaters, or receivers, operates the

The compass receiver contains ar electric contact, in reality a sort of switch, which on the least movement of the ship from its set course closes Round"; the circuit of a relay which starts an electric motor in the lower part of of the self-steering outfit. A toothed place will have gone, however. The wheel on the axle of the electric motor is connected by a chain with a tain, where relics of the Ark were on steering wheel.

In this way any turn of the compass makes a similar turn of the own vine have been buried under a steering wheel instantly follows any swerving to one side of the ship, so that the ship itself is at once steered back into its set course.

Automatic steering with the gyrocompass considerably shortens the time of a journey across the Atlantic. and when we remember that a big ship will burn a hundred tons of coa' in an hour, the economy of the self steering apparatus can be understood The gyrostatic apparetus used or the Berengaria is the invention of an English engineer, Sperry, but wher the ship; was taken over from Germany she was equipped with a German system, which was originally deised by Dr. Anschutz-Kaempfe for a submarine that was to go to the orth Pole

The compass is floated in a bath of nercury, so that its movements are almost entirely free of friction and vonderfully swift. This swiftness of novement is the chief secret of the apparatus, for a deviation in the ship's course is put right so quickly hat in the roughest sea the vessel leaves a wake that is almost unannily straight.

A great use of these steering comesses is being made in experiments n directing ships by wireless.

Ploughing costs 2/-per acre

THE Fordson Tractor has done more to increase the acreage under crop than any other farm implement.

"Ploughing costs have been reduced to 2/- per acre," says Mr. R. Greer, of Emerald Hill. "We ploughed 600 acres and drilled 400 with the Fordson. And it did the work easily."

A well prepared seed bed is a good crop insurance, and with the Fordson the farmer is assured of ideal ploughing at the right time, with less labour and at lower cost.

Speedy and economical, it provides dependability that horses cannot touch, and Fordson power is available all the year round for every machine on the farm.
