Advarate.

London. During and since the war, she has appeared in all the important concert-halls, and with the major orchestras, but counts among her most interesting experiences, playing in the factories to war-workers.

Different again was her thrill in playing with the Belgian National Orchestra in Brussels during one of three Continental tours for ENSA. Recalling this, she says: "It is a wonderful sensation to play with an orchestra in which every man is giving all he's got! That is the feeling I had wherever I played broad. And don't they love music!"

Though music was flourishing in England, she advised students intending to go there to wait until general living conditions became nore normal.

Valda Aveling had the honour of being chosen by William Walton to introduce his Sinfonia Concertante to English audiences. Delighted with her performance, he invited her to repeat the work under his baton on four other occasions. One of these performances was at the first

He thought the motion they should put was that a certain amount of preference be given local men. There were 500 applicants for 39 blocks-that was the trouble. Many of the outsiders had disappeared at Trawalla, and the local men were still there. Some of those wh had not got blocks were 100 pe farmers. It would be good thing if the Soldier Settl ment Commission took advice from such bodies as the Council. Guthrie moved that the lier Settlement Commission be asked the method employed allocating these blocks, and urged that in future allocations. good local men have a percent age of blocks allotted to them: and that it be stated that if what the Council heard about blocks not being allotted to local men was true, they strongly protested.
