Wedge concerns

Minister will speak at local forum

A public forum, to be held later this month, will hear local MP and minister for the environment and climate change, Ryan Smith, address commu-nity concerns about the future of the Green Wedges. The Diary reported in July that the state planning minister, Mathew Guy, "is conducting a review of Melbourne's Green Wedges. The minister is seeking input from local councils to determine whether the current land-use schedules are the most appropriate for Green Wedge land," Ryan Smith told the Diary.

"It will be up to the councils to recommend any changes in their own municipality."

Warrandyte Community Association president, Dick Davies, stated: "Our understanding is that whilst councils and 'potentially affected' land-owners will be consulted, there is no provision to consult with members of the public or organisations like WCA.

"There is also concern the

OUR NEWSPAPER

The Warrandyte Diary was established in 1970 as a small local newsletter. Although it has developed over the years, it has retained its strong community character, being produced by volunteers with only one aim: to serve its community. Financed solely through advertising, it guards its not-for-profit, non-commercial status and its independent voice. The Diary carries a strong editorial bias towards the people, environment and character of the place it serves. Its monthly circulation is 4000 copies and it is available in Warrandyte, North Warrandyte, South Warrandyte, Park Orchards, Wonga Park, Warranwood, North Ringwood, Kangaroo Warrandyte (approximate population 8000) is situated on the Yarra River, some 27km from Melbourne. For countless ages a well-stocked hunting ground of the Wurundjeri people, in 1851 Warrandyte became the site of the first official gold discovery in Victoria. It soon established its character as a small, self-sustaining community set in a beautiful river valley. Around 1900 the miners, orchardists and tradespeople were joined by a number of young painters who were founding the Australian nationalist arts tradition. Now a commuter suburb of Melbourne, the natural beauty, community spirit and sense of independence of Warrandyte has been largely retained. This newspaper is the voice and true expression of that spirit.

Jeff Evans, football club spokesman, told the Diary: "The owners of the Grand Hotel and Club Warrandyte have met recently to discuss the long term future of the venue. They are both aware that there is very little support for gaming in the Warrandyte community, but there is plenty of interest in good food and dining. "Both parties see the timing of the change in the gaming lease arrangements as an ideal opportunity to make a change in the venue, re-establishing the former hotel business at the Yarra Street location, currently occupied by Club Warrandyte," Mr Evans said.

"Many in the community will be pleased that they no longer have to sign in to enjoy bistro dining and fine wine," Mr Evans said.

The hotel and Club Warrandyte have pledged to "work together over the coming months to facilitate a coordinated approach to the smooth transition of the venue".

"Both parties believe that the community will benefit from these changes and the hotel will continue to be a feature of the Warrandyte village," Mr Evans said.

Application for a planning permit notice on premises formerly occupied by Lobosco's Restaurant and more recently by The Yarra Street Restaurant, indicates a proposed change of use "from a restaurant to a hotel".

Changing the guard: new management for Community Centre

Following the transfer of management of the Warrandyte Community Centre to Manningham council, the Warrandyte Community Centre Supporters Group (WCCSG) decided, at a special general meeting last month, to windup the organisation.

The Supporters Group was founded in 2000 as part of a successful community campaign to defend the centre against an attempt by the then council to lease part of the building to commercial WCA was originally formed as a partner of the Support-ers Group, with a broader mandate to promote all as-pects of community life," WCA president Dick Davies told the Diary.

"It is appropriate, now that the primary objective of the WCCSG has been achieved, that WCA maintains that role of representing community interests in relation to the

Mr Davies also thanked Manningham CEO Lydia Wilson and council officers Celia Haddock, Jan Loughman and Di Haskins for their efforts in resolving the situation.

"At this stage, WCA is unclear as to how Manningham council wishes to proceed in managing the centre, particularly in relation to establishing a community advisory committee," Mr Davies said. "We would hope to be a partner in that, but in any case will always maintain a vigilant role in protecting community role in protecting community

The wind-up meeting was followed by a thank you social, hosted by council. The Warrandyte community is looking forward to consulting with council regarding the promised refurbishment of the centre—including the establishment of a public library—during the coming months.

CALLING WARRANDYTE ARTISTS

Manningham Council, in conjunction with a number of Warrandyte artists and arts businesses, is developing a 'Warrandyte Arts' brochure.

The 'Warrandyte Arts' brochure will provide a map and information on current arts businesses and artist studios in the area, and will be widely distributed throughout Melbourne and Victoria.

Intended to attract visitors with an interest in the arts to Warrandyte, the brochure will include an image, description and contact details for arts businesses and studios as well as other information of interest for Warrandyte visitors.

To be eligible for inclusion in the publication, artists must:

- have a dedicated working arts studio/space that is safe and fully accessible to the public, with some car parking
- have current public liability insurance coverage
- be prepared to advertise their address and phone number (with their availability by appointment)
- be located in Warrandyte, South Warrandyte and North

For further information or for inclusion in the 'Warrandyte Arts' brochure, artists can contact Greg Cleave at Manningham Council on 9840 9136 or greg.cleave@manningham.vic. September 2011

Warrandyte said 'NO!' to Vodafone tower

Red and white dominated Warrandyte footy oval one Saturday earlier this month as the town came to-gether to communicate an emphatic "No" to Vodafone and Manningham councillors.

The mammoth struggle between residents and the telco giant Vodafone, over a proposed mobile phone tower for the Warrandyte Reserve, culminated in a "family fun day" at the oval with an estimated turnout of 600 Warrandyte residents, friends and family.

The rally was planned to generate media awareness of this communimedia awareness of this community's opposition to the tower and featured music, a sausage sizzle, tennis and Auskick activities and more, all contributed to by local residents and businesses, as well as sympathisers from as far afield as Vic Market.

The Warrandyte community did not disappoint. It was a moving experience as participants, decked out in Warrandyte colours formed a giant "No" on the oval. This was captured by television crews from all three commercial networks.

Kids played and had their faces painted; music from band Conch set the mood and Warrandyte demonstrated what community is all about.

Eleven year-old duet Purple Ivy performed—with homemade lyr-ics—the Bob Marley ballad "One Love". The song captured the spirit of the crowd with its haunting call, "No tower for Warrandyte!".

Manningham councillors Meg Downie, Grace La Vella, Jennifer Yang and David Ellis attended the event with Cr Ellis describing it as "a vivid demonstration of the depth of community against the tower and the remarkable spirit of Warrandyte as a whole want is a tower beside our kids!" Residents have been fighting the location of the Vodasone tower for almost two years and despite a VCAT loss, have continued to voice their opposition. An original 1200 objections to the permit was followed by an additional 1300 objections to the lease application, on which to the lease application, on which Manningham councillors have yet to vote. Local resident, Paul dal Sasso "Vodafone have shown an exsaid, "Vodafone have shown an extraordinary disregard for community concerns and calls for co-location with existing Telstra towers have fallen on deaf ears. We are here today to stand up for Warrandyte."

Rob Spargo, a senior officer at Manningham council since 1988, commented in a report on the sustained community campaign against the tower: "In my memory, and apart from the great garbage strike last century, the Warrandyte phone tower issue is the most public issue that I have been involved with."

Mr Spargo is the "responsible di-rector" of a council officers' report on the tower, which was made public earlier this month.

The report recommends that councillors vote against issuing the lease to Vodafone to Vodatone.

It concludes: "The views of the community are overwhelming in their support for a proposal to reject the grant of a lease," and describes the recommendation as consistent with council's commitment to "meaningful public consultation".

Deputy mayor, Cr Meg Downie, said councillors had heard Warrandyte's objections "loud and clear" but were required to remain objective until they cast their vote.

David Ellis was clearly moved by the rally. "Even those who have not Manningham councillors are expected to determine the fate of the project on September 27.

Helicopter risk: WCA urges council to vote against phone tower

Alarmed by its danger to air traffic, the Warrandyte Community Association has written to all Manningham councillors, expressing WCA's opposition to the planned telecommunications tower at Warrandyte Reserve...

The Warrandyte Community Association is opposed to the siting of a mobile phone base station at the Warrandyte Reserve on the basis of impending access for emer-gency helicopter landing.

There is a risk to regular medivac flights (car accidents, sports injuries and other individual emergences) that has been recognised by the Police Air Wing and CASA. We are aware that they have not said the site would be unsafe if a tower was built at the site, but they have clearly said that it represents a risk and that serious consideration should be given to relocating the tower to a place that is not a designated emergency landing site.

WCA is advised that Vodafone can achieve its network coverage goal by leasing accommodation for antennae on the Telstra-owned site on a nearby high-tension electrical pylon. The attractiveness of the Warrandyte Reserve site is apparently its relatively low cost. The tower as designed is significantly over-engineered for the mechanical load of the disclosed antennae, indicating that it is likely to be loaded up with additional equipment over its expected operational life, thereby increasing any potential risk.

We understand that Manningham council is compiling a report summarising sub-

Given the rull council meeting in October. Given the risk, the fact that a large number of residents oppose the development for a variety of reasons and the availability of a suitable alternative site, we urge you to vote against granting a lease for this development.

They gathered to launch 'Creekside'

Local residents were at last able to see exactly what has been happening in that little laneway off Harris Gully Road when the Warrandyte Community Housing Cooperative opened Creekside, their new retirement villas, to the community early last month.

"The board was delighted with the interest shown by Warrandyte people," co-op board member Val Polley told the Diary. "Unfortunately the wet weather had delayed the completion date for the project so the site was not quite as ready as the board had hoped but nevertheless comments received from visitors on the day were very positive."

Two of the five villas were open to view, demonstrating varying internal layouts and features such as north-facing aspect, double glazing and Warrandyte stone walls. Favourable comments were made about spaciousness of both the individual and Warrandyte stone walls. Favourable comments were made about spaciousness of both the individual villas and the site in general.

"When the skies cleared for a short period the rooms were flooded with sunshine, warmth and light, which met with approval, as did the wheelchair friendliness and the planned additions such as solar hot water, hydronic heating and water tanks," Ms Polley said.

"The landscaping, much of which "The landscaping, much of which was still being installed, also met with admiration with the stone seats and large boulders much liked."

Co-op chairman Simon Kearney welcomed everyone to a small opening ceremony.

Manningham mayor Geoff Gough

Manningham mayor Geoff Gough formally opened the project declaring it a great community effort and warmly praising Warrandyte people for being prepared to undertake such projects that greatly benefit the community and in not waiting for others to fix problems.

Simon Kearney expressed thanks on behalf of the board to all those within the community who had supported the project.

All five villas are currently leased and the prospective residents expressed their satisfaction and pleasure with their new homes. "They are all looking forward to moving in," Ms Polley said. It is anticipated the villas will be ready for occupation sometime in early September.

"Board members were repeatedly asked about our next project. While there are no actual plans at present, it has always been intended to invest any surplus funds into further retirement housing for local people," Ms Polley said.

Polley said.

Anyone wishing to register should send their contact details to the Warrandyte Community Retirement Housing Cooperative's registered office at 1 Kearney Lane, Templestowe 3106.

Despite community outrage, the Take a Break occasional childcare program in Warrandyte is set to close its doors in December.

Run by the Warrandyte Neighbourhood House (WNH) at Warrandyte Community Centre, the program has been providing childcare on an occasional basis for a limited period.

This gives parents and carers the opportunity to do everyday tasks such as shopping and housework, undertake studies or simply enjoy an uninterrupted rest. It also helps children learn to interact and get on with other children.

"The state budget is not in a position to take over funding a program that is the federal government's responsibility," local Liberal MP Ryan Smith said. The Take a Break program has been scrapped right across the state. (See report, this page.)

While some other occasional child-care programs will keep their doors open through fundraising and fee increases, the Warrandyte program cannot sustainably cover their overheads.

"While we could do a big fundraising drive to scrape together the funds to get us through for a year, this approach is not sustainable and it would offer no job security for our staff," Ms Throssell said.

Mums and kids rally for program

By DIANA STORY

A recent move to scrap the Take a Break occasional childcare program inspired a rally on the steps of Parliament last month, when parents, children, child care workers and thousands of teddy bears gathered to lobby the state gov-lion funding needed for the program to continue.

The protesters pointed out that other Australian states have continued to fund their occasional childcare programs, despite the federal government no longer directly funding the schemes. A petition calling for the reinstatement of this funding can be signed at www. gopetition.com/petitions/reinstate-funding-for-occasional-care. ing-for-occasional-care ernment. The protest drew attention to the 9000 families across Victoria affected, should the program's funding not be reinstated. Also highlighted was the loss of 140 jobs that may go with the scrapping of the program. Impassioned speakers from the community of the program. Impassioned speakers from the commu-nity let it be known how the Take a Break program benefits them and implored the government to reinstate the $1.9 mil-lion funding needed for the program to

Possible solution to locals' bus concern

Relief could be coming for Warrandyte locals worried by Panorama buses invading their residential streets—but they may have to wait until 2012 or later.

Residents of Everard Drive and Taroona Avenue remain concerned about the Eltham to Warrandyte buses travelling through their formally peaceful area, en route to their Warrandyte Reserve terminus.

Locals believe that these large vehicles traversing these parrow "country these parrow".

Locals believe that these large vehicles, traversing these narrow "country lanes" pose a "risk to the health and safety of residents and diminishes their quality of life".

The Warrandyte Community Association wrote to VicRoads detailing the residents' concerns, and further pointing out, "in the meantime, the roads concerned appear to be breaking up as a result of the heavier traffic".

Initially, VicRoads replied that they would not object to an upgrade at the Warrandyte/Heidelberg Road-Taroona Avenue intersection, enabling buses to safely execute a U-turn, "but at no cost to VicRoads".

In the meantime, local MP Ryan Smith

In the meantime, local MP Kyan Smith met with state transport minister Terry Mulder regarding this situation.

Last month, VicRoads wrote again to WCA informing them: "VicRoads will develop a proposal at the Taroona Avenue/Heidelberg-Warrandyte Road intersection to address this particular issue and seek funding in a future program

Dick Davies, president of WCA, stated: "It's our view that these problems could have been avoided if residents had been consulted right at the start."

New performing centre: Creek kids go all theatrical

The new performing arts centre at the Andersons Creek Primary School is already taking bookings from local community groups. "I would encourage community groups to make contact as soon as possible as available times are filling quickly," principal Trevor Gibbs told the Diary.

The new centre was opened last month by former principal, Des McKenzie. Mr McKenzie was principal when the centre was first envisaged.

rhe new facility complies with the latest fire requirement and has already made a difference to the programs on offer at Anderson's Creek," Mr Gibbs said. "The engagement of students grows when they are given the opportunity to hone their skills in the new theatre. The choir has never sounded so harmonious."

In addition to the arts, the facility will be used for school assemblies, special events, student discos, folk dancing and indoor games.

"With 440 retractable seats, sizeable change rooms, a full stage and professional sound and lighting it will be great to see community events hosted locally instead of in centres outside Warrandyte," Mr Gibbs said.

Ms Mealy believes young people—both locally and around the globe—should have the opportunity to receive a good education and become equipped with skills needed for a brighter future.

She has set up a not-for-profit tutoring organisation called SEEd (seeking to empower through education). SEEd offers weekly tutoring sessions for local students in Years 7 to 12.

Young magician is flying high

Warrandyte teenager, Sam Hume,

Warrandyte teenager, Sam Hume, wants to become a pilot. But he also sees magic as part of his future.

The 13-year-old won two awards at the Melbourne Magic Festival in July. He won first place in the Australian Junior Close Up Magic Competition and third place for Stage Magic.

"I was pleased that I improved from second place last year—I'm always trying to improve," Sam told the Diary. "I'm a bit of a perfectionist but magic is also just fun to practice. Magic is probably always going to be a hobby for me."

Known as "Sam the Magic Man", the Year 8 student is no stranger to the spotlight. He has showcased his magic tricks in talent shows since primary school and also took second place at his high school's annual talent show last year.

Sam first became interested in magic when he was about 11 years old. Before long he started magic lessons and has since developed an "obsession" with cards.

"I found this book that said how to do really simple card tricks and after that I pretty much fell in love with the cards. Just the handling of the cards and the control you have—it's something of an obsession actually."

Sam usually practices for a couple of hours every day and his tricks also involve illusions, rubber bands and coins.

Sam said his favourite part of performing is watching the audience's

"You get some people who are just astonished and then you get others who are just frustrated trying to figure out how you did it," Sam said. "Kids are more visual, whereas adults take more notice of it and they appreciate it if you show more skill. Adults are more demanding with skills, but they are easier to fool."

He meets with the Australian Institute of Magic every fortnight to discuss and learn new tricks with other like-minded magicians.

Bank celebrates reopening, birthday

HE Warrandyte Community Bank branch reopened its doors earlier this month, following a complete refurbishment.

The event also served as a celebration of the bank's recent eighth birthday.

Touching the tradition of the original opening in June, 2003, Cliff Green, accompanied this time by granddaughter Ruby, cut the ribbon to the new-look branch.

Assisting at the ceremony was board chairman Sarah Wrigley, original chairman John Provan and John Chapman, who not only constructed the original branch, but was also in charge of refurbishment.

"From closing the branch on Friday night, 10 days later—on Tuesday morning—everything was unpacked and ready to serve our first customer," branch manager Mark Challen told the Diary.

The branch "has a more relaxed atmosphere. We have taken over the upstairs area as well, so we have space and less clutter downstairs.

The branch has come a long way since its original opening eight years ago. "The discovery of gold was the best thing to happen to Warrandyte, and the second best thing to happen was the opening of the Warrandyte Community Bank," Cliff Green said, before cutting the ribbon.

After the Commonwealth Bank closed its doors in 2001, Warrandyte was left without any banking services. "Not only has the Community Bank provided this basic necessity to the survival of the town, it has given back more than $500,000 to the community in grants and sponsorships," Sarah Wrigley said.

She also announced that the bank has declared a 12 cent dividend to shareholders, payable on October 31.

"Or grants program is also open at the moment, and we hope that not-for-profit groups will apply for funds for any projects they think will have significant benefit to our community," Ms Wrigley said. Applications close on September 22.

Walter's show marked 60 years

Manningham Gallery celebrated 60 years of work by Warrandyte artist Walter Magilton. On show were pieces dating back to Walter's time as a school-boy artist. Photographer STEPHEN REYNOLDS attended the opening and captured these moments for the Diary.

Walking through wattle to help defeat cancer

Warm weather smiled on the Warrandyte Wattle Walk held one Sunday late last month, when locals walked (or ran) along the river from the bridge tennis courts to Police Street, then back through the village.
Organised by Warrandyte Lions, it was expected that at least $4000 would be raised when all the money was in was in.

Lions president Geoff Taylor and his team expressed their appreciation to the local residents who participated in the fundraiser. All the money will be donated to the Oncology Unit at Box Hill Hospital.

According to Lions treasurer John Mitton, the Opp Shop collection tin yielded almost $150, cash and cheques collected on the day totalled $2120 and deposits at the Community Bank realised $1685.

"It is important for the community to honour and remember loved ones lost to cancer," Mr Taylor said, "while supporting such excellent care providers as Box Hill Oncology."

Peter Fry, of Park Orchards, whose partner Val Lynch is undergoing treatment for leukaemia at Box Hill Oncology, thanked everyone for supporting the Wattle Walk, "either by donation or being there.
"It was a lovely day for the walk and great to see so many of you had been able to come along," Mr Fry said. The Lions Club intends making the Warrandyte Wattle Walk a regular event during coming years.

Credit where it's due - the film industry runs on credit

HEY just go on and on and on and on and on and on and on and...
I'm talking about film credits or should I say film indulgences! I'm sure someone will be on the phone to Cliff, our editor, tomorrow berating him for allowing such ill-informed crap to go to print but hey, he hasn't got much to do and a bit of gingering up might do him a power of good.

Now it might just be that the film union insists that anyone associated with the anyone associated with the film MUST be included in the credits. It might, however, be the ultimate example of the "I want my 15 seconds of fame" syndrome but I can't think of any other possible reasons for forming the audience to endure syndrome but I can't think of any other possible reasons for forcing the audience to endure the endless cataloguing of the entire workforce of Hollywood at the end of every film.

If the credits are intended to highlight the skills of individuals then they fail badly. The credits whiz past so quickly that all I am able to catch are some of the jobs but very rarely do I have the time to identify the individual before they move on to repeat the whole shebang but the next time it's for the Spanish crew, the shooting location crew or the animatronics division of some obscure cell of geeks known only to each other by names such as Rough Cut or Hang Nail.

At the end of a film Herself and I watched the other day

Hang Nail.
At the end of a film Herself and I watched the other day, I was gob-smacked when amidst the flurry of names, glimpsed through the retreating audience members, I noticed one credit. Not only was there a listing for the Grip but also for Grip Trainee. Now I'm sure that his or her mother sure that his or her mother was chuffed to see the son/daughter's name zoom past as would all the siblings, aunts and uncles who were advised to go and see Sue/Sam's latest epic but at what point do we suggest that they praise their TAFE trainees at the Christmas party and not at the cinema?

As I watched the endless list of Grade A to Z "celebrities" roll on, it made me hanker for or Grade A to Z "celebrities" roll on, it made me hanker for the films of the forties and fifties when the credits came at the beginning of the film, listed the major actors, the writer, cinematographer, the producer, the director and then let the actors get on with it. At the end, in copperplate writing, they told you it was The End and you knew you could collect your half eaten packet of Columbines and head off home. Nowadays, you're into the middle of the first of a plethora of President Clinton moments before you read of the six or seven evensillier-than-the-last-name production companies that have duction companies that have parted out for what you are about to see. You then play "I wonder how they'll manage the credits" game but by then you're into a triple axe murder and you can't be bothered.

The catering industry said

The catering industry sud-denly realises they'd forgotten the credits. Of course, they come to the next six screenings with pen and paper, ready to jot down the next few letters of the company's few letters of the company's name, as they whiz past, so they can contact them and sleep soundly.

One of my pet hates, also, is the technique of presenting the credits and names either side of a central line. Inevitably, the starting point for each side of a central line. Inevitably, the starting point for each line is wavy and becomes a reading roller coaster. By the time you get well past all the actors' names and down to Miss Glamourpuss' Local Postman, you need to take a Quells to avoid motion sickness.

Some cult films, however, some cuit films, however, take the credits to another, altogether ironic dimension. Offended by people leaving before the last moment of their artistic brilliance, directors leave the last explanatory scene until most of the audience members have left tory scene until most of the audience members have left the cinema and car park. Then, just after we read that the camera lens was hand ground in a monastery in Bhutan and that the assistant to the trainee assistant wigmaker is Charlene there wigmaker is Charlene, there is the final scene where the hand-held, almost focused hand-held, almost focused camera zooms in to reveal an unopened letter addressed to the recently suicided vegetarian pharmacist.

Gasps and an audible, "So that's why the blood letting and leech scene shot in sepia was so important!" can be heard from the one remainheard from the one remaining, recently woken cleaner. He then mentions this on Facebook and suddenly, the very ordinary becomes "cult" and is discussed in reverential tones by David and Margaret.

ential tones by David and Margaret.
I'd like you to know that this was written by me, Herself made the coffee, my dog's name is Milli and I'm wearing a K-Mart track suit.
Roger Kibelle Credits creators, of course, are given credit in the Credits just in case someone in the audience who might have just completed a film about the end of the motion picture.

We go a little further north...

By LINDA ROGAN

WARRANDYTE spring with swathes of yellow wattles and splashes of purple Hardenbergia is a real buzz; especially since I've just returned from northern Australia. I travelled to treat a touch of Seasonal northern Australia. Itravelled to treat a touch of Seasonal Affective Disorder but mainly because my favourite creatures, native bees and butterflies are active in Far North Queensland in winter.

The rewards in terms of species new to me, were huge.

The rewards in terms of species, new to me, were huge. Our furthest north point was the Coloured Sands at Elim Beach just north of Cooktown. Beachside walking past huge mudskippers, stopping to observe the flight of a colourful day moth and marvel at a White-lipped Green Tree Frog sitting on the beach in a freshwater trickle, was just a freshwater trickle, was just a start. I was soon distracted by a strong and persistent buzzing in a flowerless wattle

A large bee with a narrow head, swivelled in midair, turned his curved green eyes on me, and then darted off. His head and thorax were covered with collaboration and the same transfer of the same tr ered with golden-yellow hair with sparser yellow bands over the dark abdomen. This was one of Australia's largest was one of Adstraina's largest native bees, the Great Carpen-ter bee; a male, patrolling his territory. These males emit a chemical perfume, an aroma like nectar and pollen, strong enough for humans to detect, but aimed to lure female bees. Nearby, one female was feed-ing on the nectar of Melaleuca flowers. With a bright yellow waistcoat and a shiny black tail, she was more interested in the real blooms than in the male. Like our Blue Banded Bees, Great Carpenters are good buzz pollinators of flow-ers such as Dianella and to-

Travelling further south, a Queensland friend's photo alerted me to a cryptic and fascinating critter that is found only at Cape Tribulation and sporadically down as far as Mission Beach in Australia; it is also in Indonesia. We headed for the nearest location, Cape Tribulation. As instructed, we searched amongst the prickly Pandanus leaves. Initial searches resulted only in punctured resulted only in punctured fingertips. Our luck changed in the garden of the Daintree Entomological Museum. Here, amongst chewed and broken Pandanus leaves we were shown several bright bluesets that ish-green stick insects that were tucked into the crevices between leaves; others were feeding in broad daylight. These were Peppermint Stick insects (pictured). In addition to their peppermint green colour, these phasmids earn their name by shooting out a sticky white fluid from the four corners of their thorax, if disturbed. This fluid has a remarkable peppermint smell, and is irritating to predators and perhaps to careless observers. They can squirt it as far as 30cm. Therefore it is best to avoid stressing the insects. Later that day we located other colonies near Cow Bay.

As August wore on, we visited Byfield State Forest, near Yeppoon. The forest is now mostly pine plantations but still retains some remarkable flora and fauna. Here, just near the edge of the more intact Byfield National Park, I was charmed by drifts of tiny blue Lobelia flowers blooming in moist areas near the car park. I knelt down to check for visitors. The first I noticed was a small blue butterfly similar to our local Dusky Blue. Nearby was something much smaller, a tiny moth perhaps. A close look confirmed that the brownish wings, with four dark spots on the hind wing, were those of a butterfly. It was a challenge but I managed a couple of sharp photos. Later I was thrilled to identify the Grass Jewel, Australia's smallest butterfly it is a great stall. est butterfly; it is a great relief to know I will not be called upon to photograph a smaller butterfly. The caterpillar's food plants are two species of annual Indigofera that dry up and die after the wet. The butterfly is seldom seen beyond June so I was very lucky to see it in August.

It is tempting to go on talking about many more Queensland encounters but instead I will hurry out and catch up with the local critters.

It's all power to the consumer!

ELSTRA is going to have to watch itself. After decades of blitzing the field in the Obfuscation Stakes, some worthy competitors are finally fronting up.

After having solar panels installed, we waited months for our new solar smart meter. I know they've been busy, but the process seemed neverending: the power supply company organises the job through SPAusnet, who in turn arranges specialist contractors. Endless paperwork!

After a month or two we even got a letter from somebody—I forget who—asking us to check that the other crowd was properly organised crowd was properly organised and ready to roll. But at last! All sorted. The new system was finally about to click into place.

It never happened. Arriving

It never happened. Arriving home in early June from a flying trip to Brisbane, we spotted a piece of paper protruding from under the doormat. "Customer not home," read the docket. "Job cancelled." Cancelled? We were stunned. Haven't they heard of telephoning first? Especially as that was the arrangement

"We are not allowed to tele-phone you madam," gloated the mouthpiece of the previ-ously-unheard-of company whose name was on the dock-et. "Privacy regulations pre-

et. "Privacy regulations prevent us knowing your phone number."

I cannot believe my ears. Somebody contracted to do a job here is allowed to know our name and address but not our phone number? Haven't they heard of the White Pages?

"You should have requested in writing that your number in writing that your number be made known to us." Jeep-ers! How were we supposed to know that? "Can't I just to know that? "Can't I just give you the number now?" Of course not. "You no longer exist in our system." I may as well have been a flea trying to shift a walrus.

So we began all over again. What a waste of time! Eventually a letter arrived from SPAusnet, specifically stating that we didn't need to be home when the installers be home when the installers changed our meter. This was clearly not true, so I phoned. "Normal people don't need to be home," explained the girl at the other end. "But you can make an appointment if you'd rather." Well, I would rather, as it happens, sidestepping the issue of what constituted "normal". The girl couldn't name a day, but it would be before July 18 and somebody would definitely phone first.

a day, but it would be before July 18 and somebody would definitely phone first.

A few weeks later another letter arrived, reminding us that we didn't need to be home when the meter was changed, and amending the change-over period to August. I phoned SPAusnet again.

"Oh! We only have one man who does appointments. His next free day is September 5."

Luckily I was at home on July 15 when Meter Changer Man arrived unannounced. "I don't do phone calls," he explained happily. "That's the boss's job." Predictably, he did need to get to our switchboard inside the house, but the job was simply done and our lovely new solar smart meter worked a treat.

You'd think the saga would end there, but of course it doesn't. Last week's power bill was a complete dud. An-other polite phone call, this time with some difficulty, as the functionary on the end of the line was pretty aggressive considering it was only ten past eight in the morning. He refused to talk to me on the grounds that (a) his computer said we did not have a solar meter, and (b) I wasn't authorised to speak to him. I am delighted to think that the recording of the ensuing conversation may be used for conversation may be used for training purposes.

So, with September 5 looming and the powers-that-be obviously in complete disarray, I wasn't too surprised to get a phone call from a helpful young lady at UXE (who?) re the proposed installation of a replacement smart meter. It took me half the afternoon to convince her that we already took me half the afternoon to convince her that we already had the correct meter. Somehow it's become her job to persuade SPAusnet'to switch it on at their end and report back to Origin. Sigh! I think it's all too much for them. I know it's all too much for me!

A passing too soon: Judith will be remembered by this community

By BEN DAVIS

HE untimely passing of someone who is impor-tant in our lives almost inevitably leads to a feel-ing of bitterness mixed with the usual grief and sadness that these occasions evoke.

This is absolutely the case as I reflect on the passing of my mother, Judith Pleasance. Judith was born on October 25

1943 and died on June 11, 2011. I can confess to some feelings of bitterness that she never had the opportunity to become a grandmother. For many years Mum looked forward to being a Mum looked forward to being a grandmother — and may have mentioned it once or twice during those years as well! She had a plan that during her retirement she would be able to be very active in the raising of any grandchildren that happened to be around. She relished the potential opportunity that ultimately will remain unfulfilled for a variety of reasons, most important of which is her untimely passing at the age of 67. My youngpassing at the age of 67. My youngest sister Calida is now pregnant, our family's first grandchild, an occasion for great joy but also of wondering of what might have been

Mum worked for more than 40 years as a teacher and passed on only a few months into her retirement. Sadly she never really got to enjoy this well-earned time in her life. That fact seems patently unfair and all too common for those of Mum's generation. To have worked so hard and so long at a job obs. Mum's generation. To have worked so hard and so long at a job she loved, making such a difference to the lives of so many students, particularly the countless number of struggling teenage boys she took under her wing. It seems simply wrong for her to pass so soon after retirement at the start of what could have been the golden part of her life.

For 10 years I nagged Mum to go on a holiday to the United Kingdom. Having been fortunate enough to visit there in 2001
I realised in a matter of hours that I realised in a matter of hours that Mum should definitely take a long holiday there. Being a lifelong devotee of literature and history as she was, I felt very strongly that for her, a trip to the "Old Dart" would be the time of her life. Her lifelong claustrophobia made it very difficult for her to fly but finally she and my stepfather Jim made the bookings, paid for the tickets and were all set to go in August 2011. Mum passed on in June.

So we are left somewhat embittered that a life so full and so complete was cut so short. So short at the point where she had so much to look forward to. Angry? No. Just saddened.

Mum lived in Warrandyte for almost 45 years, all of that time in the family home in Houghton Road where my sisters Briony and Calida and I all grew up. Not for Mum, the passive suburban existence. She was involved in a long list of local passive suburban existence. She was involved in a long list of local sporting and educational bodies as participant or administrator. Mum played netball for Warrandyte Netball Club, cricket for Warrandyte Women's Cricket Club and for many years, tennis at the Warrandyte Tennis Club. And, as I discovered at her wake she also played women's football but that was before her Warrandyte days. She also served on the parent-teacher committee at Warrandyte Kindergarten (whilst I was a student there). It goes without saying that Mum had a hand in the running of all of these, officially was a student there). It goes without saying that Mum had a hand in the running of all of these, officially or unofficially.

But no account of Mum's life in Warrandyte could be complete without some mention of her involvement in the local Australian Labor Party. For some four decades she was the stalwart of the Warrandyte ALP. To her fell the duties of filling polling booth rosters for election days as well as letterboxing ALP material, often in areas that were not exactly renowned as being strong Labor Party supporters. Indeed amongst my earliest memories are those of running from the family car to letterboxes all weekend to deliver ALP material in areas where it was impractical to walk. What others would consider a chore, we considered a family outing! No political party could ask for a more diligent servant and it is from Mum that my sisters and I have inherited a keen sense of social justice and equity. Upon reflection it is obvious that my own decision to pursue a career in the Trade Union movement was at least informed by, if not inspired by, the countless dinner time conversations about the political issues of the day and the increasingly frequent ALP meetings at our home in Houghton Road.

Mum's other great passion was of course her teaching. As previously mentioned Mum was a teacher for more than 40 years, all of it spent in the state system. It would seem odd that in all that time Mum never taught at Warrandyte High, but that was because she didn't want to teach at the same school that her kids attended. My sisters and I are all oddly grateful for that! Not content with teaching as a day.

are all oddly grateful for that! Not content with teaching as a day job, Mum also tutored a number of students after hours, particularly struggling male students. Fresh from teacher's college, she found an affinity for not so academian affinity for not so academically talented students at her first school, Jordanville Tech. For the rest of her career, she found herself relating well to these kids and their parents.

To Mum often fell the task of telling the parents of struggling male students that their son was best cut out for an apprenticeship rather than a university degree—a not inconsiderable task in the 1980s and 1990s when manual labour inconsiderable task in the 1980s and 1990s when manual labour was seen as a very distant second best life option. While on maternity leave after my sister's birth, Mum also volunteered to take my Prep class at Andersons Creek Primary in reading classes. It will also come as no great surprise that my sisters and I all inherited from Mum a passion for reading and the written and spoken word.

Mum died far too soon from complications relating to her treatment for cancer. But like me, as I write this, please take a moment to re-member the life of an indefatigable member of the Warrandyte community.

Vale Mum. A life well led that ended far too soon.

Where the wild things were

Where is the light in this velvet gloom? Naked arms reach out for me, clawing. and the creatures out this time of night aren't friends, though they may be merely wary, watchful.
But we know there are no wolves or bears.

Not in this story, anyhow.

These woods are home to other fears—goblins, sprites, flicking through shapeless grey and bad knights fleeing from good ones. (Who knows that they'll do without God on their side?) And maybe desperate peasants whom God has abandoned. But we know there's no real violence. Not in this story, anyhow.

In fact, think of these woods on a dappled summer's day, with twinkling streams where Ondine lives, and she's like a lot of them nice in the daytime. And the creatures now are cute! Fluffy tails and stripey backs, lots of snuffling and scampering. And we're not scared of weasels and ferrets. Not in this story, anyhow.

Do we have woods mummy where there are houses with hens feet No, we have The Bush, and some very shy snakes.
Houses have stumps, hens are on feet, grannies are tough, and are friends with the snakes.

In this story, anyhow.

Marnie turns 100: family, friends and a good life

By VAL POLLEY

ARGARET (Marnie) Horkings, who will celebrate her 100th birthday on September 14, declared Warrandyte a very special place in "It has a re" which to live.

"It has a personality all its own," she said, recalling memories of her earlier days when the township was smaller and more personal and although she thinks it has lost some of that feeling, she knows it still means something important to the older generation.

some of that feeling, she knows it still means something important to the older generation.

Marnie was a country girl, born in Warracknabeal. Her father James Center was a renowned Scottish piper and dancer who had migrated from Scotland in 1908 with his family of bagpipe makers. They set up business in Brunswick providing their Center bagpipes in response to a surge of interest in all things Scottish and to the Caledonian societies that had sprung up around Victoria. James was lured to Warracknabeal to teach piping and dancing. He travelled extensively winning many competitions, medals and cups. Marnie, and her family, are rightly proud of their Scottish ancestry.

James died in 1919, a victim of the Spanish flu epidemic that swept the world but the family treasures photos that show him as a dapper man in highland dress with a waistcoat of medals. Center bagpipes are renowned worldwide and considered collector's items today. Marnie remembered one example; a piece in the paper a few years ago asking for somebody who was marnie remembered one example; a piece in the paper a few years ago asking for somebody who was prepared to part with their set of bagpipes to state their price. She didn't follow on with Scottish dancing however, preferring calisthenics as a young girl ics as a young girl.

She gained the name Marnie
when the father of her childhood friend Winnie thought her too small to have a big name like Margaret so called her Marnie instead and it stuck

stuck.
In the early 50s Marnie and husband James (Jim) bought land in Mitchell Avenue in Warrandyte. At the time they were living in Hawthorn and Marnie worked at the post office in Kew. The owner of the shop had a mate, Clarrie Martin, who was renovating a cottage in Mitchell Avenue and so they would come out at weekends for Jim to help.

Jim to help.

At that time there were only a few houses along the road that followed Specimen Gully. One was Specimen Cottage owned by Tommy Haines, one of the old gold-miners.

In those days the lot at No 22 was as far as Mitchell Avenue went, all the land beyond was Crown Land supposedly not to be split up. The land on the high side of Mitchell Avenue was set aside for a Catholic School (which never eventuated) so it was a quiet little pocket of the township. But soon after they purchased the land at No 22 the land beyond was subdivided and land beyond was subdivided and sold. Well known Warrandyte identity, Daisy Hawkes, sold the land to them for $100, but when they turned up with the money in cash she was so surprised she returned $10 to them. After building their bouse they then moved in around house they then moved in around

This was the time when B II Mc-Cullough delivered the mail on horseback, Moore's store on the riverbank displayed billycans and boots and to make a phone call meant turning a handle on the phone to get the post office exchange.

marnie laughed at the recollection the operator knew everyone and their activities. Sometimes if you asked to speak to someone the reply could be, "Oh she's just gone to Ringwood on the bus; she'll be back at lunchtime".

to Ringwood on the bus; she'll be back at lunchtime".

At that time daughter Leonie and son Robin had to travel to Ringwood on the bus for work and school. Robin had a cubby house up in a tree on their land and his friend Tony lived across the Yarra. "Sometimes it was unexpected that they wanted to talk to each other," Marnie remembered, "so he'd just get up the tree and yell out 'Horky!" They would then shout to each other across the river.

Husband Jim worked in the building trade with his brother Bob, and then when he retired he went to work for local gunmaker Merv Naughton. He had a custom-made rifle from his time there which had to be relinquished at the time of the gun buy-back, much to the family's disappointment.

They never owned a car and Marnie walked everywhere. She was indefatigable and a well-known sight in her later years, particularly in her purple raincoat. She was often offered, but rarely accepted lifts. This daily exercise combined with her vegetarianism may well have contributed to her longevity. She became a vegetarian as soon as she was old enough to please herself and now laughs at the memory of some of the options offered and the struggle, even now, to always find good vegetarian dishes.

Jim was a firefighter in the days when the fire station was in Mitchell Avenue. He fought the bushfires that swept Warrandyte in 1962. The fire burnt to the fence-line of their block, even melting hoses draped along it, but petered out in a loop of hose laid on the ground. Meanwhile Marnie went to the river to shelter. She remembered there being someone in charge at river to shelter. She remembered there being someone in charge at the river for those who went to the water for safety. "That man sort of made sure we all had proper protection," she explained. Leonie recounts how she was married and living in Newcastle and phoned repeatedly to try to find out how her parents were faring. Eventually Jim answered and reassured her everything was fine and they were both fine. It was only years later that Leonie found out he actually hadn't a clue where Marnie was at that point.

hadn't a clue where Marnie was at that point.

Leonie returned to live next door to her parents in Mitchell Avenue. Discussing past memories of their lives in Warrandyte, Marnie paid tribute to her daughter saying while a lot of people go ahead and just grow up; Leonie had cultivated memories of people and places and followed things through.

After Jim died 11 years ago, Marnie lived on independently in her home before eventually moving into residential care at Blue Willows in Ringwood. A later fall necessitated a more recent move into a new and attractive residential home in Porter Street overlooking a new and attractive residential home in Porter Street overlooking the Yarra Valley.

Marnie will celebrate her 100th birthday there with an afternoon tea and all the family. Leonie and husband Peter and grandsons Andrew and David, son Robin, grandchildren Bruce, Jeffrey and Erin and great-granddaughter Myah. The Bellbird Choir from Warrandyte will entertain them, the randyte will entertain them, the staff and other residents. There will be cake. Marnie laughed at the thought of having to blow out 100 candles but given her love for life and her family, there is little doubt that she will be able to do so if called upon Margaret (Marnie) Horkings is a shining example of living for 100 fulfilling years. Warrandyte adds its own congratulatory message to those from the Queen and other notables, relatives and friends.

Did you enjoy the training aspect?
I enjoyed it all, but it takes its toll on your body. I look back and I wonder how I did it. I used to come home some nights and just lie in bed and I'd be aching. I'd be thinking 'what am I doing this for?' Then I'd have to get up the next morning and do it all again. It's amazing how much I don't remember of those years because you're just so into yourself and you just have to look after yourself. I don't really remember events or things like that because I was just so busy looking after myself, my body and the team.

A little birdie told me you were a Collingwood fan growing up, so how did it feel to play for the enemy? I was a Collingwood supporter until I went to Carlton. I became a Carlton supporter pretty much straight away when I joined the team. Now I can't stand Collingwood. I just don't like their Eddie McGuire mentality. Even though I also played for Sydney, we didn't really win many games. So I'm really just a Carlton fan now.

Tell us some of your football career highlights.
I played a few times overseas. I played in Japan and then London three years in a row with Carlton. It was great to be able to travel with football and see other places. It gave me the travel bug after a while. I travelled a little bit after I finished playing. I went to London, America, Japan and Canada.

What would you say is your most memorable highlight? When we (Carlton) won the Grand Final in 1987. It was a tough game. I remember it was a hot day, about 30 degrees. Just the release after the game - we'd been trying to achieve it and we lost the year before in 1986. I'd say that win was my greatest sporting achievement.

Are there any lowlights?
Just injuries. I had a lot of injuries to deal with. I did my knee once in 1988 and missed half a year. I also did my ankle once in 1989 and missed half a year. I had chronic hamstring problems when I finished my career so that forced me out of the game. I was only 28 when I finished AFL. I wish I could've kept going. I probably would have liked to play until I was 32 or something.

So how did you come to live in Warrandyte?
We were looking to buy a bigger place and we settled in Warrandyte. That was about 18 years ago. I love living here. I think it's great. I like the animals. We have all sorts of wildlife come through our back yard. We're lucky here.

Holland, who is already First XI captain, will help mentor and guide the entire playing list. Holland has been a figurehead at the club for many years now and, while still in the prime of his career, his knowledge and familiarity around the club are assets the club feels will assist in guiding Warrandyte to success. Holland had much personal success last season as well, finishing with the Gerald Walshe Medal, awarded by his peers for the best and fairest throughout the season in the First XI. He also won the Steve Pascoe Medal, awarded by the Ringwood District Cricket Association as the best player in Wilkins competition. With a return of 31 wickets and 141 runs, Holland proved his ability in all forms of the game and will ensure this knowledge is passed on throughout the club.

Next on court were the U18 girls, who took on Kilsyth. This was fourth against ninth, but Kilsyth was always in the hunt, shaded slightly in the first two quarters and taking the third by a point.

Venom gained a lead of 10 points midway through the final quarter when Kilsyth started to fight back.

"Slow the game down, don't panic," coach Tiff Hodgson said at a time-out as the gap narrowed to two points.

The last few seconds were tense with Rachel Watson getting a field goal in the dying seconds, giving Venom a 40-36 victory.

Earlier in the night, the U12 boys went down to Altona 38-33. A strong third quarter put Venom in the picture, but Altona steadied to take the points. Zac Price top-scored for Warrandyte with 12 and Tyler Robertson scored 6.

AUSKICK SEASON COMES

By BUZZ LAWSON

By BUZZ LAWSON

SADLY, this is my last Auskick sports report for the year as our extremely successful and wonderfully attended season drew to a close. It has been a fantastic year with 100 children attending every Saturday morning throughout the winter to learn basic footy skills, get some fresh air, have a run around but most importantly make friends and have lots of fun.

Auskick finished its season with a hard won Grand Final to Red team.

After winning the tap out through

After winning the tap out through ruck James Knowles, Kyle McGown took the ball for Red, evaded three opponents and snapped the first goal of the game. A great tackle by Tyler Read, followed by fast play by Clare Papadopoulos, enabled Lucas Rear to kick another goal and give Red a handy lead at quarter time.

After the break, Elliot Corcoran laid four tackles in a row, was awarded a free kick and handpassed to Thomas Curpow who then put in a spiralling free kick and handpassed to Thomas Curnow who then put in a spiralling torp for a goal. Jack Pope, Tom Hefernan and Harrsion Gruber kicked another goal before half-time.

After the break, Joel Cooray and Lily Mackey combined inside the back half to dodge several opponents and deliver the ball to Noah Reddaway. Noah used his strength to shrug off four tackles before handballing to Hugo Stevens. Hugo put in a 45-metre pass to Mitchell Snowball who then set up full forward Jake Stubbs. Jake kicked a pressure goal and finished off with a salute to his mum in the crowd. In the final quarter, with Red down by five points, a pressure ball was won by Nicholas Sharpe who then went for a run and three bounces before handballing to May Griffiths. May went long to Sebby Nitschinck who took a great mark and handballed it to Calum Lawson. Calum demonstrated his preferred left foot to put the Red team in front by a point Finally with seconds left on point. Finally, with seconds left on the clock, the opposition had the ball in its goal square and it looked like all was lost for Red. Then Noah Lawson stepped up to take a crucial mark on the final siren, saving the mark on the final siren, saving the game for Red.

The Auskick crew would like to thank Janie 'the real Boss' Lawson for all of her hard work behind the scenes in ensuring the administration of Warrandyte Auskick went smoothly, IGA for its continued support of Warrandyte Auskick by providing supplies for the fundraising BBQs and Marty "the energiser bunny" Rostron for being the driving force behind a wonderfully successful Auskick year. Unfortunately Marty is moving up to be a Tackers parent next year so good luck from all at the club.

See you all next year (ideas for articles happily accepted by Buzz!).

DESPITE being put up two divisions, Warrandyte Junior Football Club U10 Bloods showed great courage to make it to the Grand Final this season and only just missed out on a fairytale ending. Finishing with only one loss, the team met main rivals Surrey Park in the second semi final to see who would go straight through to the Grand Final. The boys were under instruction to tackle hard and concentrate on winning the ball.

The game started slowly for the young Bloods and after the first quarter they were 18 points down. After a revving up from the coach at quarter time, the side rallied and lifted its determination to win the contests - tackling, chasing and harassing their opponents and winning the hard ball.

Oscar Hodgson led the backline and was strong in defence push-

Farewell to a champion team

The club bids farewell to one of the best junior sides to wear the red and white. The Colts 1 team has been a remarkably durable and successful side that competed admirably over many years against the best sides in the Yarra Junior Football League.

This team was runners-up in U10s and was promoted to Gold division for U11s. Playing their first season in top division, the boys lost the Grand Final by just five points. Over the next six years the team played in the highest division and made the finals four times. Playing made the finals four times. Playing against competition powerhouses never fazed the boys, who were duly rewarded with a premiership last year. That particular grand final win was remarkable given the team was a bottom-age team in Colts. The victory was achieved against a team that had beaten them by 87 points two weeks before the finals. In 2011, the team was the first Warrandyte side to play Colts Division 1. In a trying season that saw the boys play many games with only 15 or 16 players, they won enough games to finish fifth.

The skill and tenacity of the side was always on show and they

The skill and tenacity of the side was always on show and they have set a standard for future junior teams at Warrandyte. Best wishes to Ryan Exon and Jacob Ballard in the TAC Cup next year. Special mention to the following boys who were a part of the club from Tackers to top-age Colts: Jake Wintle, Neil Brown, Daniel Nilsson, Tim Nilsson, Kyle Robertson, Jarrad Buzzini, James Munks, Jacob Ballard, Ryan Exon and Lauchlan Frowd.
